West Facing Continued Bad Weather In February

Detailed Survey Of 23 States by The Post Indicates No Relief in Sight

Saving Lives First Aim

Army declares saving human lives has become the major problem in the blizzard-swept Western plains as known death toll rises to 19. Story and People in the News on page 2.

Worst Winter on Record

By Ben Bradlee
Post Reporter

The western half of the United States is suffering from the worst winter weather on record—and there is every indication the bad weather will continue into February, a Washington Post survey showed yesterday.

The survey, covering 23 States through eight official Weather Bureau centers, indicated no end in sight for the snow, blizzards and low temperatures that made January a record month.

The Post survey covered the States of Iowa, Minnesota, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, California, Arizona, Nevada, Montana, North and South Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, Utah, Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

United States weathermen J. R. Lloyd in Kansas City, Wayne Harrell in Salt Lake City, Ralph Gumps in Billings, Mont., Harley Laird in Denver, Colo., S. M. Bromberg in Chicago, H. A. Downs in Seattle, Henry McQueen in San Francisco, and A. K. Showalter in Los Angeles supplied the information about their areas.

Agree on Origin and Path

All agreed that the winter storms started in the northwestern section of the continent, moved slowly south, picked up speed and moisture crossing the Rocky Mountains, and ripped unchecked across the Midwestern plains.

The State-by-State survey follows:

In Wyoming, worst hit of all the States, new records were set for persistent cold. For the first time Lamarr and Caspar had reported more below zero temperatures than above zero for January.

Complete weather statistics would not be available until the first week in February, but Caspar was still talking about the 43-below-zero weather it suffered for two successive nights in the middle of the month.

Record 42-Inch Fall

In Nebraska, Chadron had a record snow fall of 42 inches in one blizzard on the 2d and 3d of January. It has been in the center of two more blizzards since then. Forecaster J. R. Lloyd said that State-wide temperatures were at least 10 degrees below normal.

Ice gorges, frozen blocks of snow and ice, had broken on several Kansas rivers, and flooded

British Columbia Power Slash to Cut Workers' Pay

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 29 (AP).—A 33 per cent slash in industrial power consumption, effective early next week, is expected to eat into pay envelopes of 75,000 wage-earners in British Columbia's power-short lower mainland.

President A. E. Grauer of the B. C. Electric Co. today announced sweeping power restrictions which also will affect stores, offices and theaters, and possibly cut transportation. Commercial and residential customers already are rationed to 50 per cent of normal lighting power.

A 52-day drought and a 39-day freeze have drained vital reservoirs and only 18 days' water remains.

'Bicycle Wanted' Ad In Post Gets Results

HOLIDAY IN TEXAS—With most Dallas motorists taking a vacation from the streets, the youngsters take over after yesterday's heavy snowfall. Even the dogs seem to enjoy the unusual spectacle, as these children coast safely down a hilly street on their home-made sled. The South's blanket of snow extended from Texas through the Carolinas

3 to 6 Inches Of Snow Due In D. C. Today

Area May Escape If Gulf Storm Front Veers Out to Sea

A storm front blowing up from the Gulf of Mexico was expected to bring 3 to 6 inches of snow to the Washington area today. Snow flurries began at 12:20 a. m.

The Weather Bureau said the main storm still could veer off and blow out to sea, as did one which was expected to bring 3 inches or more of snow here Christmas day.

The snow may be mixed with a little sleet, the forecaster predicted. Highest temperature today was expected to be around 30 degrees. Tonight probably will be somewhat milder than last night, he said.

Snow as deep as 7 inches and a glaze of icy rain hit a wide area of the deep South yesterday.

Communications lines toppled under a gathering burden of the icy glaze. Crops put well on the way to maturity by recent balmy weather faced destruction. Travel, except by train, came virtually to a halt in some areas, press reports stated.

Blasts Out of Texas

The storm blasted out of Texas and flung sleet or snow across Mississippi, Louisiana and parts of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee and the Carolinas. Sleet and freezing rain extended to the Mississippi and Louisiana coast. Communications to New Orleans were disrupted.

Five inches of snow fell and the temperature dipped to 22 at Jackson, Miss., which only two weeks ago perspired in an 85-degree winter heat weave. Snow fell at the old river town of Vicksburg and at Greenwood in the Mississippi delta.

South Georgia peach trees, in full bloom, faced destruction, as did Louisiana's one-million-dollar strawberry crop.

The sun shone through thin clouds here most of yesterday, with the mercury dropping from a high of 30 degrees at 2 minutes after midnight to a low of 21 at 9:14 a. m. That was considerably under the record high of 73 set for January 30 in 1947. Record low was 6 below zero on January 30, 1873.

For those who get into arguments as to how little snow Washington has had so far this winter, the weatherman checked back and observed it's been a mild winter. The books showed only two measureable amounts of snow, 4.4 inches on December 19 and 1.7 inches on January 12, not counting three days with traces of snow in December and two in January.

Victims from Pa.

Two Killed In Chillum Air Crash

Two men were killed and a third was injured severely when their three-place biplane crashed in a farmer's field at Chillum, Md., about 5:10 p. m. yesterday.

Killed were James M. Brown, 23, of Cochranville, Chester County, Pa., and Willard Leroy Kirk, 30, of 133 Maple st., Oxford, Pa.

The third occupant of the plane, Malcolm Jones, 20, is in Leland Memorial Hospital, Riverdale, Md., with severe head cuts and a broken jaw. He is a clerk at the National Bank of Oxford and son of Willard B. Jones, Oxford real estate dealer.

The injured youth's father said by telephone last night the three friends apparently were on a pleasure flight. He said Brown, who worked for an Oxford dry cleaner, and young Jones often went for airplane rides together on Sunday afternoons.

Brown and another Oxford man owned the plane jointly, but it could not be learned last night who was flying it yesterday. Both Brown and Kirk were qualified pilots, it was learned.

Two 11-year-old West Hyattsville, Md., boys told Prince Georges County police they were attracted by the sound of the plane's motor sputtering. Playing in the field on the Miller farm about 300 yards off Sargent rd., they said they saw the biplane clip a row of trees on the west side of the field and then crash nose first into the ground. The boys are George Knudsen, 6202 20th pl., and Charles Crosse, 6218 20th pl., West Hyattsville.

The boys ran to call help, police were notified, and the Brentwood

Gen. Vandenberg Urges Speed on Non-Pilot Policy

By the United Press

Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg told key commanding officers yesterday to get going on the Air Force's new policy of putting non pilots in command of non flying units.

The Air Force Chief of Staff sent a memorandum to his major commanders "to reemphasize the vital importance" of carrying out the policy "in spirit as well as letter." He said he wanted it to be "a policy in fact at the earliest possible date."

The new regulation was issued three months ago. It made officers without flight orders eligible to command non flying units. Previously no regulation had covered the point but a seldom-broken unwritten policy limited command posts to pilots.

Board Accepts 4 St. John's Resignations

College Controversy Said to Be Entirely Administrative Issue

Baltimore, Jan. 30 (AP).—The resignations of President John S. Kieffer and three other top administrators of St. John's College in Annapolis were accepted today by the board of visitors and governors.

Controversy on an administrative level at the 164-year-old "great books" college came to a head last week when Kieffer requested and received the resignations of Dean Raymond N. Wilburn and his assistant, Luke Harvey Poe, jr.

The board went into special session yesterday to investigate the difficulties.

Richard F. Cleveland of Baltimore, chairman of the board, announced the resignations of Kieffer, Wilburn, Poe and Treasurer Harrison Fiddesof.

Cleveland for the first time acknowledged the strife between Kieffer and the other three administrators, which he referred to as "differences of opinion on purely administrative problems."

Kieffer and Wilburn were given sabbatical leaves for the academic year following June 30, 1949, the date their resignations take effect. Both were told they would be welcomed back as "most respected members of the faculty."

Cleveland said Poe will be given a leave of absence as a member of the faculty if he wished it. He emphasized that Poe's resignation as assistant dean does not affect his status on the faculty.

The resignation of Fiddesof as treasurer is to be effective as soon as a successor is appointed. His faculty status also is not affected.

Cleveland prepared a statement for a student body mass meeting on the campus tonight.

Cleveland's statement said in part:

Legislation Mill Starts Grind Today

Committees Begin Full Operations; Both Houses Wait For Major Bills

NYHT News Service

Congressional committee machinery will go into full operation today as the Eighty-first Congress approaches its second month.

Except for stopgap legislation to continue the voluntary program for allocation of scarce materials, both House and Senate still were in a position of waiting for the grist of legislation to emerge from committees.

The tempo of committee activity, now that the preliminaries of organization are out of the way, stepped up, however, to embrace a wide variety of major proposals. These included Government reorganization, reciprocal trade agreements, appropriations, export controls, displaced persons and Senate filibusters.

Anti-Inflation Bill Drawn

At the Administration drafting level but expected to go to Congress this week, was an omnibus anti-inflation and full employment bill expected to propose among other things authority for Government construction of steel plants and the repeatedly denied standby power to impose price and wage controls. Agitation over rent controls also was expected to stimulate committee consideration of pending proposals to continue them in force.

Moreover, the revamped House Un-American Activities Committee was scheduled to meet in closed session today for its formal reorganization in preparation for resumption of its work.

The Senate planned to take up today a bill to continue for seven months the voluntary system under which the Government and industry work together on the allocation of steel and other scarce materials. The House plans to take this up in mid-week, both planning to act swiftly in view of the expiration of existing authority at the end of February. Enactment of this bill will give the Senate and House banking committees more time to consider permanent legislation along the same lines.

Those committees, meanwhile, are working to complete this week bills to extend the export controls program, likewise expiring with February, for another 28 months.

Hoover to Appear

The always politically ticklish problem of giving the President power to rearrange, combine or abolish Government agencies in the interest of efficiency and economy is to be tackled at an open hearing today by the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The case for this authority will be opened by former President Herbert Hoover, chairman of the bipartisan Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, which is concluding an exhaustive study of the problem.

The House Ways and Means Committee, meanwhile, plans to wind up its hearings on the bill to extend until June 12, 1951, the Administration's authority to enter into tariff-reducing reciprocal trade agreements. Opponents are scheduled for a hearing today, but Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.) said yesterday he hoped to end this phase of its work Tuesday and have a bill ready for submis-

Stalin Ready to Talk Peace, Disarmament With Truman, He Says

Russian Leader Agreeable to Parley At Some Mutually Acceptable Place

By Eddy Gilmore

Moscow, Jan. 30 (AP).—Prime Minister Stalin said today he has "no objection" to a meeting with President Truman at some mutually acceptable place to discuss a "peace pact" between the United States and the Soviet Union.

(President Truman has stated frequently he is ready to meet Stalin any time in Washington. But officials in Washington said so far there has been no official Soviet approach for a Truman-Stalin meeting.)

Replying to a questionnaire, Stalin said the Soviet Union "would be prepared to consider" the issuance of a joint declaration with the United States in which each country would proclaim it had no intention of resorting to war against the other.

Disarmament Mentioned

Further, the Soviet leader said, Moscow was willing to join with Washington in measures leading to "gradual disarmament."

In a reference to the German problem, Stalin said Russia "sees no obstacles" to lifting the Berlin blockade if two conditions are met by the western powers. These would require the removal of the West's counterblockade and would require the United States, Britain and France to postpone establishment of a western German state, pending a meeting of the Big Four Council of Foreign Ministers on the entire German issue.

(Several attempts have been made by the western powers to compromise the Berlin situation. Last fall the United Nations Security Council in Paris had a proposal calling on Russia to lift the blockade and for a Big Four foreign ministers' meeting on Germany 10 days later. It was vetoed by Deputy Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky.)

Follows Other Moves

Stalin's statements were made in reply to four questions submitted to him by Kingsbury Smith, general European director of International News Service.

Stalin's statement closely followed two other important Soviet diplomatic moves. On Friday the Soviet government issued a 34-page White Paper asserting that the proposed North Atlantic Pact is intended to establish American-British domination of the world by force.

S. A. Afansiev, Soviet ambassador in Oslo, yesterday asked the Norwegian government to say whether it proposes to join the North Atlantic alliance and whether it plans to grant military bases on Norwegian soil to the western powers.

(Stalin's statement also was being studied in world capitals in

Sixth Upheaval in 13 Months

Bloodless Revolt Overthrows Gonzalez Regime in Paraguay

Asuncion, Paraguay, Jan. 30 (AP). A bloodless revolution deposed the government of President J. Natalicio Gonzalez today.

The president took refuge in the Brazilian Embassy as members of his own cabinet seized power. They had formed a secret dissident group in his own Colorado Party.

(The Asuncion radio, heard in Buenos Aires, said Gen. Raimundo Rolon had been named provisional President at a meeting of the National Assembly.

(Rolon, Defense Minister in the old cabinet, is expected to serve for the next two months when a general election will be called.)

Thus ended the five turbulent months of his administration. It was the sixth Paraguayan revolution since the start of 1948. Gonzalez himself led one of them.

Labor Minister Augusto Salvidar, a leader of the coup, said the new government would seek peace with the country's multiple warring political factions. The Colorado Party had outlawed all opposition.

Not all of the cabinet had a hand in the rebellion. Some members took haven with Gonzalez. Among them were Treasury Minister

Nanking Takes Appearance Of Open City

Acting President Expected to Follow Cabinet to Canton

Nanking, Jan. 30 (AP).—Vanishing defense forces today gave this Chinese capital the appearance of an open city, into which the victorious Communist armies can march almost at will.

The government's efforts to beg a peace settlement were bogged down on all levels, from national to municipal.

There were increasing indications that acting President Li Tsung-jen—last high government leader still in Nanking—soon would follow his cabinet 750 miles southwest to Canton.

Li's closest advisers denied he was preparing to leave, but it was learned from other sources that accommodations had been reserved for his party in Canton.

The government has announced it will be operating in Canton by February 5. The Nanking Kiangnan Evening Post reported the cabinet actually planned a session in Canton February 1, only two days hence.

There has been no official move to declare Nanking an open city (which according to the customs of war would change hands without defense or attack), but it was mov-

Soviet Attitude Forces Rearming, Sen. Smith Says

Senator Margaret C. Smith (R., Me.) said yesterday that Russia's attitude has left the United States no other choice but to rearm, even at the risk of economic insecurity.

"We can't bluff the Russians. Russia must be convinced that we mean what we say. We've got to have what it takes to back up our foreign policy," Mrs. Smith said in a radio interview (WPIK, Alexandria).

She said the United States must keep on trying "as long as there is the faintest glimmer of hope" to solve the world's problems through the United Nations. But she said all nations must respect "by acts as well as words" the aim of the U. N. to settle problems of belligerency.

Scandinavian Defense Talks End in Failure

Russian Prodding Of Norway Shifts Focus of Cold War

Oslo, Norway, Jan. 30 (AP).—Scandinavian defense talks ended in failure here today after Russia applied pressure on Norway to make a choice between East and West.

Norway, Sweden and Denmark were divided on whether or not to throw in their lot definitely with the western powers. Norway wanted a linkup with the West and apparently stuck to it.

Soviet Ambassador S. A. Afansiev asked Norway yesterday whether she intended to join the projected North Atlantic alliance and if she planned to grant military bases on her soil to the western powers.

The inquiry came only a few hours after the Soviet government asserted in a white paper the North Atlantic pact is intended to establish American-British domination of the world by force.

The Russian squeeze on Norway came at a psychological moment in the Scandinavian defense talks.

After those talks were concluded today, the Norwegian, Swedish and Danish foreign ministers issued a communique which said that in spite of sincere efforts, no basis for a Scandinavian pact could be found.

Specifically the split was over whether or not such a pact should be linked to the more embracing western defense system. Norway took a stand in favor of joining such a system, while Sweden clung to the principle of neutrality. Denmark was said not to have made up her mind definitely which way to go.

Norway pointed out that her military forces were relatively weak and would have to be strengthened by equipment from the West, since such supplies were not available anywhere else.

Officials in Stockholm and Copenhagen said Russia had made no approach to Sweden and Denmark.

Norwegian official sources intimated Norway's answer to Russia will come soon and that it will not be difficult to formulate. The informants did not elaborate.

The terminated Oslo talks will not be followed by new consultations at this stage, it was said.

Vishinsky Better, Leaves Hospital Several Hours

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Jan. 30 (AP).—Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky, reported gravely ill at a sanatorium at Karlsbad yesterday, was so much improved today he left the hospital for a while.

There still was much mystery about the nature of the illness, what brought Vishinsky to Czechoslovakia, and practically everything else related to his visit.

(Moscow dispatches made no mention of Vishinsky's visit to Czechoslovakia, or about his illness.)

His attendants gave no hint of where he went while out of the hospital for several hours today. They said he had received no visitors.

Officials of the sanatorium last night said he was "gravely ill from a nervous disorder" and "unable to concentrate on anything."

The one-time purge prosecutor in the trials of anti-government Russians is subject to rages which may have affected his nervous system.

Charged With Robbery After Unique Chain of Events

By Jean Reiff
Post Reporter

A routine hotel check by police for two missing girls early yesterday developed into a bizarre "cops and robbers" story which saw:

1. Three policemen, one with a bandit's gun pointed at his stomach, held at bay for a short time by an armed holdup man.
2. Seizure of a second bandit as he fled.
3. Surrender of the armed man to a policeman friend, formerly a fellow bus driver.
4. Capture of a third bandit at the home of one of the first two arrested.
5. Confession by the trio of the holdup of a hardware dealer (a former policeman who caught them burglarizing his store); a car theft, and plans to rob other downtown hotels.

Two of the men, Richard P. Sweet, 24, a lather, of 1253 G st. se., and John F. Young, 21, a driver, of 8320 Allentown rd., Prince Georges County, Md., were each charged with two counts of armed robbery, one of robbery and one of unauthorized use of an auto.

In addition, Sweet was charged with two counts of assault with intent to kill. The third man, Merle

Mid-Air Collision

2 Killed, But 33 Land Unhurt After Plane Strikes Airliner

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—A trans-Atlantic airliner and a private plane collided over Long Island today, killing two persons in the private ship—both of whom were hurled into the hull of the London-bound airliner by the crash.

Port Washington, N. Y., police said parts of what they thought was a third body were found scattered over their town, but later said they were almost certain only two persons were aboard the small plane.

The Pan American World Airways ship, its cabin battered and its top gashed open, made an emergency landing at Mitchel Field Air Force base carrying almost the entire private plane.

Pan American reported that none of the 23 passengers and 10 crewmen on the liner was injured.

The captain of the airliner, George Knuth, said the small craft "flew into the top" of his plane.

The copilot, Malcom Wade, said the small plane struck the liner with a blow "like a tremendous tire blowout."

He said there was a "tremendous crash and the plane shuddered and dropped" before it could be brought back under control.

Wade said "nobody had any warning" of the collision.

Pan American tentatively identified the two bodies hurled into the airliner as those of Arthur Dutting, Portland, Conn., and Eugene Jowjalezsk.

The airline said the two men were aboard the private plane when it left Connecticut this morning to fly over New York.

2 Missionaries Left Behind

U. S. and British Group Saved From Embattled Burma Town

Rangoon, Burma, Jan. 30 (AP).—A planeload of American and British subjects told today of their rescue from the town of Bassein, which has become a flaming battleground in Burma's civil war.

Guns blazed in fierce street fighting and fires dotted the town as the plane took off yesterday with the liberated foreigners, three of them American missionaries.

Two Americans were left behind. One is Mrs Charles Conrad, a frail missionary whose husband is in Rangoon. Friendly natives risked their lives to dash through flaming streets and carry her to a nearby village.

Missionary Erville E. Sowers of Granville, Ohio, remained in Bassein, about 100 miles west of here on the Irrawaddy River delta.

The story was told by Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Sarjeant of Oakland, Calif., Seventh-Day Adventist missionaries, and by the pilot, Capt. Roy W. Marriott, former Royal Air Force flier.

The foreign group, which also included a number of Britons, had made a forced landing at Bassein Friday just before Karen rebels and Burmese Communist insurgents captured the town. They were liberated, they said, when government troops stormed the city yesterday.

A government communique announced the rebels finally have been driven from Bassein.

The communique said nationalist columns also were fighting to recapture points on the Rangoon-Mandalay railway which had fallen to the rebels. It described the campaign as progressing "most satisfactorily."

Virginia-Born General Pick a 'Natural' For Difficult Jobs Like Storm Relief

Six-foot, square-jawed, silver-haired Maj. Gen. Lewis Andrew Pick, selected by the Army to direct storm relief work in the West's worst winter of 60 years, is a "natural" for big, tough jobs like that.

The Virginia-born, 59-year-old civil engineer won world acclaim for his incredible success in constructing "Pick's Pike," the Ledo section of the Burma, or Stilwell road, cut through the jungles of Burma to carry war supplies from India to China in 1943-45.

The Ledo Road was one of the greatest engineering feats in Army history. Experts called the problem insoluble. The dense, mountainous jungle was 175 to 200 feet deep, with only meager native trails, when Colonel Pick arrived in October 1943.

In 15 months, 45,000 Americans and 42,000 natives built 483 miles of road and 155 bridges, 1800 miles of pipe lines and laid as much telephone wire. They built airfields and handled supplies for engineer and aviation troops, working around the clock by using Diesel oil in cans for night lighting, and taming native headhunters until they got to hitchhiking by thumbing rides.

Pick is less known, but perhaps even more widely acclaimed in military and engineering circles, for two other jobs that were possibly bigger and probably longer-lasting in their ultimate effect.

One was the spending of a billion and a half dollars in the direction of 93,000 construction workers in building airfields, cantonments, hospitals, airplane and munition plants, relocation centers for Japanese evacuated from coastal areas, and many other projects as the Army's Missouri River division engineer for 18 months after Pearl Harbor.

A job he did on the side at the same time was to direct the battle against the Missouri River's spring floods in 1943, when the swollen waters of the "Big Muddy" and its tributaries inundated more than two million acres of the country's best farm land, causing damage estimated at 65 million dollars.

Another job he took on about that time—and completed in three months—was to draw up the Pick Plan, a "comprehensive program for over-all control and utilization of the full water resources" of the Missouri River basin, which won the unstinted approval of a quiet, unobtrusive Senator from Missouri named Harry S. Truman.

While the Pick Plan's author was in Burma, the battling engineers of the Army and the United States Bureau of Reclamation compromised on the Pick-Sloan Plan for the Missouri River basin. It became law in December 1944, and Major General Pick returned in November, 1945, to resume its overall direction.

Pick has always been known for his patience, gentleness and concern for his troops. The Army expects those qualities will endear him now to the storm-stricken ranchers toward whose relief and succor the Army engineer now will bend all his ability.

In Snowdrifts

Army Fights To Save Lives Of Humans

The Army, bulldozing its way through Western snowdrifts, said yesterday that saving human lives has become a major problem.

The Army had reports from observers in areas west of Omaha, Nebr., that lack of food and fuel was the biggest problem. Everything possible is being done, the Army said, to open roads and to move supplies to people in isolated areas.

The known death toll, direct and indirect, due to the severe weather since January 3, rose to 19 yesterday as a train crew near Hemingford, Nebr., found the frozen body of Otto Trojan, 37-year-old farmer.

Two new-born Indian babies, were among the storm's death toll.

Rescue workers expected to find many more dead when the area was opened up.

In Chicago, the Fifth Army, reporting that some areas have been without rail communications since the start of the storms, added that "We just don't have enough planes or time" to feed starving cattle by air.

"Figure it out for yourself," Fifth Army headquarters said. "In one county in Nebraska, Holt, there are 100,000 cattle starving. A C-47 plane can carry 2 tons of fed."

"To supply those cattle with one day's feed would require 500 flights. We just don't have enough planes or time to do the job by air. We've got to get the roads open."

Warmer air made the Army's western task a shade easier by moderating below zero temperatures. There were some light snows, but "nothing significant."

The cattle-feeding task still remained formidable.

Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Pick, the Army's renowned Ledo road builder who yesterday took over the job of bringing help to suffering humans and starving cattle in the Missouri Basin area, greeted newsmen with this report:

"Gentlemen, the best news I've got is that it's a sunny day today and it will be a good day tomorrow and the next day."

The Weather Bureau in Kansas City underscored the general's statement, saying it looks as though the succession of death-dealing blizzards are at an end and "a return to normal winter weather can now be expected, with only minor disturbances."

Twenty-four hours after the Army took over, Pick said, it had all the equipment it needed—or knew where it could find it—to do the drift-busting job in Nebraska and South Dakota.

The general counted 131 bulldozers already on the scene in South Dakota and 165 in Nebraska. Sixteen Army "weasels" were also on hand in South Dakota and 12 more in Nebraska.

Rotary snow plows, bulldozers and weasels were being concentrated on the two States from all over the Fifth Army Area, General Pick said. In addition, contractors from Minneapolis to Kansas City and several States were lining up equipment for the stricken area.

General Pick said he expected to get a go-ahead from the Public Works Administration today to move into parts of Wyoming. Yesterday, the PWA gave the general the nod to take over in Nebraska and South Dakota.

[The United Press said Assistant Secretary of Army Gordon Gray and Lieut. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, chief of Army engineers, left Washington by plane yesterday to assume command of the big task.

[An Army spokesman said the two officials have blanket authority to survey present rescue operations, then give on-the-spot orders to throw the full weight of Army resources into whatever steps they believe necessary.

Pay Hike Bill Is Drafted By Forrestal

By The Associated Press

Defense Secretary Forrestal said last night he has sent to the Budget Bureau the draft of a bill to provide pay increases for the armed forces.

The bill submitted for Budget Bureau study is based on the report of a special civilian advisory commission, made last month. That report proposed increases which, spread over all ranks and services, would average about 15 per cent.

President Truman's recently submitted budget contained an item of 400 million dollars for providing the pay increase during the coming fiscal year.

Forrestal made a number of modifications in the original report. Most of them were concerned with retirement provisions, the general purpose being to preserve, at the option of the individual, certain existing retirement benefits for specified classes in service when the new provisions become effective.

He also recommended that in addition to "hazardous duty" extra pay, service personnel be given special pay for "extraordinarily unpleasant or arduous duty for a substantial period of time." He did not specify what such duty would involve. Such extra pay, he said, should not exceed $50 a month.

Taft Doubts That Budget Will Be Cut

By the United Press

Senate Republican Policy Chief Robert A. Taft voiced doubt yesterday that Congress can cut President Truman's proposed $41,900,000,000 budget for fiscal 1950.

Speaking on NBC's "University of Chicago Roundtable," the Ohio Senator said he still favors lopping at least three billion dollars from the Government spending program for the 12 months beginning next July 1. But he said that "Congress is not strong enough to stand up against" Mr. Truman.

"If the President insists, it is politically doubtful whether Congress can pass it (a budget cut) over his head. I'm saying what ought to be done, on a bipartisan basis if the President would go along too."

Taft also hinted for the first time that he might support some form of tax increase if Congress does not trim the budget.

"I would only approve a tax increase if Congress actually appropriates more than is coming in," he said in response to a question. "It ought to be put off until the end of the session. Then, if more is appropriated, I agree that we must have a balanced budget."

President Truman has asked for a four-billion-dollar tax boost to meet an estimated deficit of 800 million dollars.

Wall of Old Alexandria House Falls as 17 Residents Leave

The Washington Post

Policeman William Schwartz Examines Gaping Hole in Alexandria House

Part of the wall of an old Alexandria brick house collapsed yesterday, injuring no one but forcing 17 residents to the street.

City Building Inspector A. R. Lash ordered occupants to vacate the cracking, three-story building at 306 North Fairfax st. shortly after a 15-by-12 foot section of one wall toppled about 12:20 p. m.

One of the occupants, Robert Slade, said he was on the second story when he heard a "cracking" on the first floor.

"I came down to the front room," he said. "Five or six bricks had fallen out of the wall. I stood there and watched all of it fall."

The collapse bared all of the first floor kitchen, and most of the living room. From the outside, the house resembled one struck by a bomb in the London blitz. The wall fell outward, so that the inside of the building was undamaged.

Alexandria police estimated the house to be more than 100 years old. Slade, and his wife, Mary, said they had been hearing "cracking" noises for more than three months.

They said they had reported the cracking to the landlady, Mrs. Helen Coates of 3558 13th st. nw. many times.

Lash said he had received no complaints on the building as unsafe prior to yesterday. The only buildings regularly inspected by his office, he said, are large industrial or public structures.

He said his preliminary check did not indicate the cause of the wall's collapse, but pointed out that the bricks were held together by old-fashioned dry-lime mortar.

The Alexandria Red Cross said all residents of the house, including five children, had found lodging for the night with friends or relatives.

Truman Joins In Inaugural Gap Chuckles

President Truman yesterday joined the congregation of First Baptist Church, 16th and O sts. nw., in chuckling over the mystery of the lost 29 minutes during the Inauguration ceremony.

The President, who walked the eight blocks from the White House to the church, heard the Rev. Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor, preach on "The Christian Mysteries."

"We often imagine mysteries where there are none," the clergyman said. On Inauguration Day, he said, a newspaper reporter called him to see if he knew the reason for the 29-minute delay between the time the President was scheduled to take the oath of office and the time the event happened.

"I hated to disappoint him, because there was no mystery," he said, bringing chuckles from the President and the congregation. Dr. Pruden did not know the President was planning to attend the service.

In the sermon, Dr. Pruden also paid tribute to the late Rev. Dr. Peter Marshall, chaplain of the Senate and pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, 1301 New York ave. nw., who died last Tuesday.

After the service a White House car called for the President.

Filibuster Test Nears

By the United Press

Southern Democrats engaged in a tricky game of words yesterday in their antifilibuster fight in the Senate.

They were looking for a definition for "national defense" that can't be turned against them later to push through civil rights legislation.

The fight is headed for a showdown in the Senate Rules Committee this week. Hearings on proposed antifilibuster rules are expected to wind up Monday with the testimony of Senators Tom Connally (Tex.), Spessard L. Holland (Fla.), Olin D. Johnston (S. C.), and Clyde R. Hoey (N. C.).

Unless they can limit the filibuster-breaking rules to "national defense" measures, the Southerners may lose their most effective weapon against anti-poll-tax, antilynching, antisegregation and antidiscrimination bills.

Republican Senators are arguing that the present system of unlimited debate can tie up vital defense measures. As an example, they cited a filibuster by Senator Glen Taylor (D., Idaho) last spring against the peacetime draft.

Carrier-Flown Balloons Aid Cosmic Ray Study

By The Associated Press

The Navy said yesterday it is going to try sending balloons from a carrier deck 19 miles into the upper atmosphere. The plastic spheres inflate to 70 feet.

The project, known as "Operation Skyhook," is part of the Navy's study of cosmic rays which do not penetrate in quantity to low altitudes.

The test will be made by scientists aboard the carrier Saipan, now en route to Guantanamo, Cuba, on a training cruise.

Pope Sees Church Surviving Conquest

By Barrett McGurn
NYHT News Service

Rome, Jan. 30.—Pope Pius XII told 6000 young students today that the Catholic church will survive even if the City of Rome is conquered and the Basilica of St. Peter's is sacked.

The pontiff said he mentioned the possibility merely "on pure hypothesis." His remarks coincided, however, with those of at least one other high Vatican official, who disclosed recently that there is a possibility the papacy will be moved to Spain or South America in event of a Russian Communist advance.

The Vatican source explained that free lines of communication are extremely important to the church.

Pope Pius said there are now 400 million Roman Catholics and that central direction, therefore, is more essential now than ever before. He indicated, however, that promises of Christ to St. Peter that the church would be undivided have reassured him for the future.

In a message by radio to Catholics in South America, the Pope said today the Catholic Church is placing "many hopes" in the Latin American, predominantly Catholic nations.

The Pope appealed to the South Americans to "re-Christianize your families." He said that nothing else was more important "if you want to save the very existence of humanity."

The pontiff commented in passing that St. Peter's Basilica stands on the spot where St. Peter was entombed. The comment was considered especially significant by archaeologists, because truckloads of dirt have been removed recently in the course of excavations.

The work was undertaken on order from Pope Pius. So far findings have remained a closely guarded secret.

Day Designated

Church Asks Prayers for Mindszenty

The Archbishop of Washington and bishops of every other American diocese yesterday called upon Roman Catholics to observe Sunday as a day of prayer and protest on behalf of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary.

In a letter read at all masses, the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle urged public prayers and supplications for the Hungarian people and their spiritual leader on "Cardinal Mindszenty Day," February 6.

Cardinal Mindszenty was arrested and jailed by the Communist-dominated government of Hungary December 27 on charges of plotting against the government, spying, treason and black market dealings. Trial of the primate is slated to begin Thursday.

Public opinion in all free countries has been deeply shocked by the arrest of the cardinal, the archbishop's letter said.

"The Hungarian people themselves, overwhelmingly Catholic and stanchly loyal to the great champion of their human rights, have been cruelly doomed to silence," it said. "Suffering under the iron heel of secret police, watched by spies and informers, threatened with the loss of their livehood or even worse, they can only go to their churches and pray silently for the man who represented the last free voice and the last strong hope of a people yearning for freedom."

Issues in Hungary, the letter said, are nationalization of the schools and substitution of atheism for Christian teaching, suppression of all religious organizations, denial of freedom of the press, and demand of the Hungarian government that relief goods from the United States be distributed in the name of the Hungarian government.

The Blessed Sacrament will be exposed throughout the day in all churches. The day of prayer will conclude with a Holy Hour of Reparation in the evening, at which the rosary will be recited to plead for intercession of the Mother of Christ.

87 Priests and Nuns Are Reported Slain

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—The auxiliary Bishop of the Archdiocese of New York said today he had received word that 87 Catholic priests, brothers and nuns had been slain by Chinese Communists.

The Most Rev. Thomas J. McDonnell said he was notified by cablegram yesterday that 58 priests, 16 brothers and 13 nuns had been put to death by Chinese Reds. He said the cablegram was sent by Archbishop Riberi, apostolic internuncio in China.

He said these casualties occurred before May, 1948, and covered a period of less than one year.

Rector, Son Challenging Vestry Ouster

NYHT News Service

New York, Jan. 30.—Taking his case to the congregation as a whole, the Rev. Dr. John Howard Melish, rector of Holy Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church in Brooklyn, today issued a challenge to anyone else to remove him or his son, the Rev. William Howard Melish, from their posts.

The younger Melish, who is assistant rector, is chairman of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, the cause of dissension in the church for the past year. The council is on the Attorney General's subversive list.

Many in the unusually large crowd of 400 at the morning service wept openly when Dr. Melish said that "the moment we are not wanted by the people of this parish, our resignation is in your hands."

Evidence of support for the Melishes among churchmen of all denominations was seen in the fact that a meeting of a "selected group" of them will take place at Union Theological Seminary Monday morning. The group will discuss the January 17 action of the Holy Trinity vestry in petitioning the Right Rev. James Perrette de Wolfe, Bishop of Long Island, for "dissolution of the pastoral relationship" between Dr. Melish and the church and the implications of that action in connection with "pulpit freedom" of all creeds.

"Today there are two mighty nations which stand over against each other, each capable of using the ghastly instruments of warfare against the other," said Dr. Melish concerning the crux of the Holy Trinity fight. "Both peoples desire peace. There is not the slightest doubt about this in the mind of all intelligent persons."

"The moment, however, that anyone speaks of peace with Russia today," he added, "he is vilified, misrepresented and misunderstood."

In an oblique attack on the Marshall Plan, he said that "we are of those who believe that such things as UNRRA make for peace. Such things as those which have been substituted for UNRRA make for war."

Athens Abuzz Over Answer To Guerillas

Athens, Greece, Jan. 30 (U.P.)—Radio Athens' reply to guerilla Gen. Markos Vafiades' peace proposals appeared today to be degenerating into a squabble over the broadcast's interpretation and intention.

The press ministry, which prepared the broadcast statement and issued it to the press, said today that any reports it represented an official government reply to Markos were "misinterpretations."

Those favoring the reply, both inside and outside of the government, kept silent. They originally said they intended to use the broadcast to get worldwide public support by showing that Greece was ready to make a democratic peace and to spike a Communist peace bluff. They consider the scheme an internal political squabble.

Suspect in Priest Shooting Held After Blazing Gun Battle

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—A blazing gun battle in the heart of Manhattan led today to the capture and wounding of a suspect sought in the shooting of a Roman Catholic priest.

The man, identified as Elmer Stanford, about 40, was felled by police fire—which he returned—after he was trapped in a three-story rooming house on East 69th st.

A score of police, who first tossed tear gas bombs into the building, pumped a dozen bullets into the suspect's room before he was subdued, wounded in the throat and stomach.

An intensive police search had been under way since late yesterday after a gunman shot and wounded the Rev. Vincent J. Campbell, a Roman Catholic priest, during a confessional at the Church of St. John, the Martyr.

The priest, wounded in the leg, was not seriously injured.

Police said Stanford had been rooming at the residence on East 69th st. for four or five years. They quoted neighbors as saying the man often told them he did not like priests. A quantity of religious literature was found in his room.

Reds Prepare To Sabotage German State

By Edwin Hartrich
NYHT News Service

Frankfurt, Jan. 30.—The formation of new political combat units within the Communist Party organization in western Germany was reported unofficially here today by Allied sources.

This is accompanied by a quiet infiltration of an estimated 50 specially trained Communist agents into the United States zone. They are reportedly here to organize a political guerilla warfare to discredit and impede creation and functioning of a new independent western German state.

Because a few of these agents have deserted, Allied authorities have been able partially to piece together the expected new strategy.

Should the Communist Party have to go underground in western Germany, these men will become the leaders of the units that will continue to function, it was learned.

[The Associated Press said the Russians charged today that German sabotage is hindering industrial production in their occupation zone. The official Soviet army newspaper, Taegliche Rundschau, also warned the zone's 17 million Germans that, although some economic gains had been achieved, because of the allied counterblockade "further difficulties" still lay ahead.]

British Would Step Up Trade With Soviet, But Fear Spying

London, Jan. 30 (AP).—British fear of Soviet spying on guarded industrial processes has put a crimp in British plans for stepping up trade with Russia, responsible sources reported today.

British factory owners and the Soviet Trade Mission in London are deadlocked on this question: Where does observance of the rule of "let the buyer beware" leave off and bare-faced espionage set in?

At the point, say the Britons where Russia demands permission for its engineers to inspect British factories from end to end—with a set of blueprints to guide them.

Not at all, say the Russians. It's a customer's normal right, which the British granted the Soviet Union freely in wartime, to look over a factory whose products he buys.

An official of the Electrical and Allied Manufacturing Association said:

"The Russians want to place that condition into all contracts involving manufacturing processes.

The official added it is the British viewpoint that it is enough for the purchaser to inspect the finished product and reject anything faulty.

Italy Gets ERP Supplies

Rome, Jan. 30 (AP)—Italy received 5,747,104 tons of European Recovery Program (ERP) supplies in less than 10 months, it was announced last night. Coberto Tremelloni, Italy's ERP minister, said shipments up to January 20 included 3,500,000 tons of coal, 1,400,000 tons of petroleum and 750,000 tons of cereals.

Stalin Statement Greeted Cautiously

NYHT News Service

White House officials and the State Department greeted reports yesterday of Premier Stalin's "peace pact" suggestions with extreme caution pending a searching word-by-word analysis of the four-point statement.

The general reaction to the Stalin suggestions—including his willingness to meet with President Truman at a "mutually acceptable" place—was that it is not yet clear whether the Soviet pronouncement is for home propaganda purposes or is motivated by a sincere wish to end the cold war. Michael J. McDermott, State Department press officer, said last night the department had "no comment" on the matter.

That official Washington was not prepared to take the interview on its face value was apparent from guarded comments of officials of the State Department. One official at State said the matter had not been officially brought to the Government's attention. He added there would be nothing to prevent the United States from making formal inquiries if it is decided, after study, that Premier Stalin's comments show hope for an eventual understanding.

Timing May Be Significant

Diplomatic circles here called attention to the release of the Stalin statement at a time when the United States is drawing closer to completing a draft of the North Atlantic pact with western European nations.

Representative Sol Bloom (D., N. Y.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said that "if the dove of peace flies our way, don't kill it, but find out what kind of a message it is bringing."

As chairman of the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.) saw the Stalin statement as "a significant development in foreign relations." He said it "holds possibilities for peace and harmony." Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), ranking minority committee member, withheld comment.

Premier Stalin's announcement that he would be glad to meet with President Truman at a "mutually acceptable place" recalled that only on January 13 Mr. Truman repeated again that he would be glad to see the Soviet chief—in Washington.

The President is said to feel that it is Premier Stalin's turn to come here, as he journeyed to Potsdam to confer with the Soviet leader in 1945. It is understood that the chances of Premier Stalin coming to the United States are slim, as he reportedly fears long air flights and the journey by ship would take too long.

The State Department also recalled that Robert A. Lovett, former Undersecretary of State, declared just before his retirement, January 20, that Russia should give proof of her good faith. He suggested that Russia lift the Berlin blockade and restore Austrian independence as evidence of a desire for East-West settlement.

Ulterior Motives Feared by British

NYHT News Service

London, Jan. 30.—A British Foreign Office spokesman said tonight that "luckily the burden of replying to Stalin is on the United States and not on us." He observed that "this is not the first time" peace overtures have come from Marshal Stalin.

The spokesman saw in the Stalin replies a possible Russian attempt to block the proposed North Atlantic pact. He said Russia can intimidate the small countries concerned "as witness its efforts in Scandinavia," but it can only hope to "persuade" the great powers like the United States by peace offensives.

The spokesman indicated that British diplomatic circles also viewed the Stalin replies as a move to "freeze out" Britain and leave the question of peace or war to be settled between Washington and Moscow.

"I suppose Vinson is already packing his bags for a trip to Moscow," the spokesman said, with a trace of bitterness.

Stalin's Talk on Berlin Received With Reserve

New York Herald Tribune News Service

Berlin, Jan. 30.—Western Allied and German officials here greeted Prime Minister Stalin's interview on Berlin with great reserve, asserting that it was merely a restatement of the position the Soviets have taken all along.

A high American official in the military government staff said: "There is nothing new or conciliatory in the statement."

Government Aids 127,000 Disabled

The United States office of Vocational Rehabilitation reported yesterday it is now helping 127,000 disabled men and women to learn how to make their own livelihoods.

That is the largest number ever enrolled in the Federal rehabilitation program, Director Michael J. Shortley said.

He reported that 25,603 persons were restored to self-supporting status during the last six months of 1948.

World Hunger Danger Cited

By the United Press

The Foreign Policy Association said yesterday the world will not be free from want or war until it balances growing populations with food supplies.

A report prepared for the association by C. Lester Walker, magazine writer, said the world's population is increasing at the rate of 21 million a year, and in 100 years will total 4,500,000,000.

Walker feared that may result in a "grim and harrowing race in which mankind's primary problem may become nothing more nor less than the need to keep one step ahead of ever-threatening want and poverty."

He said there is little new land for cultivation, but that conservation measures, new type crops, greater food yields from the sea, and scientific discoveries, will help.

Citing Germany's over-population as an underlying cause of both world wars, he said it is probable that the number of democratic nations may continue to decline "as long as there are more empty bellies in the world than there is food to fill them."

Stalin Says He's Willing to Meet Truman at Some Mutally Acceptable Place

the light of recent declarations by French and Italian Communist leaders which appeared to indicate a more conciliatory Communist line toward the west. Some quarters have suggested that Russia now is engaged in a "peace offensive." Officials of the western powers have said that actions speak louder than words and there has been no indication thus far of a change in Communist policy in Greece, Berlin or China for instance.)

Following is the official text as translated from the Russian and distributed in London:

"The following are the answers given by J. V. Stalin to questions put by Mr. Kingsbury Smith, European general manager, International News Service of America, received on January 27, 1949:

"First. Would the government of the U. S. S. R. be prepared to consider the issuance of a joint declaration with the government of the United States of America asserting that the respective governments have no intention of resorting to war against one another?

"Answer. The Soviet government would be prepared to consider the issuance of such a declaration.

"Second. Would the government of the U. S. S. R. be prepared to join with the Government of the United States of America in carrying out of measures designed to implement this pact of peace, such as gradual disarmament?

"Answer. Naturally, the government of the U. S. S. R. could cooperate with the government of the United States of America in taking measures designed to implement this pact of peace and leading to gradual disarmament.

Western German State

"Third. If the governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom and France agreed to postpone the establishment of a separate western German state, pending a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers to consider the German problems as a whole, would the government of the U. S. S. R. be prepared to remove the restrictions which the Soviet authorities have imposed on communications between Berlin and the western zones of Germany?

"Answer. Provided the United States of America, Great Britain and France observe the conditions set forth in the third question, the Soviet government sees no obstacle to lifting transport restrictions, on the understanding, however, that transport and trade restrictions introduced by the three powers be lifted simultaneously.

"Fouth. Would your excellency be prepared to confer with President Truman at a mutually suitable place to discuss the possibility of concluding such a pact of peace?

"Answer. I have already stated before that there is no objection to a meeting."

Soviet Announces They'll Repatriate 30,000 Germans

Berlin, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—An announcement in the official Soviet newspaper Taegliche Rundschau said today that Russia will repatriate 30,000 German prisoners of war next month.

It was the first Soviet statement on actual repatriation figures since the British, French and American governments demanded an explanation from the Kremlin on January 3.

The announcement said that during February, 30,000 German prisoners will be received at Camp Groenfelde near Frankfurt-on-Oder.

Acheson to Meet With Six Envoys

By the United Press

Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson is expected to meet this week with the Ambassadors of Canada and five European nations, possibly to reply to Russian charges that the North Atlantic Security Pact is warlike.

The expected meeting would be the first Acheson has held with diplomatic representatives of this country's allies in the cold war against communism since he took over at the State Department.

Diplomatic sources said the security alliance pact would be the subject of the meeting. And it would be logical, they said, for the seven nations to consider a formal answer to Russia's angry and repeated criticism of the pact.

The Kremlin has officially charged Britain and the United States with using the proposed treaty to obtain "world domination." It also has called on Norway to say whether it will join the pact or provide Norwegian bases for the Western Allies.

While American diplomatic officials denied the charges informally, they postponed any formal statement until they could consult with the other nations drafting the pact. These are Britain, Canada, France, Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

Any formal answer probably will emphasize that the pact is aimed at safeguarding the peace, and bolstering the work of the United Nations. Russia contends it would scuttle the U. N.

The treaty itself now is not expected to be signed before mid-March. Even then it must be ratified by the United States Senate where Acheson faces a stormy tussle. Some Senators have grave doubts about both the treaty and its companion two billion dollars American arms shipments program.

Even such stalwart Administration supporters as Chairman Tom Connally (D., Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, have declined to commit themselves until more details are available.

Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) said today that GOP cooperation hinges on whether Republican foreign policy leaders really are consulted in advance or whether they are given a "courtesy" fill-in at the last minute.

Knowland and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge (R., Mass.) summed up the doubts held by many of their colleagues. While they expect to support the program, they want assurance that western Europe would be ready and willing to fight in a showdown.

The Senators said it also would be "unthinkable" for the United States to share its military secrets with western Europe unless the European governments, particularly France, purge Communists from key posts.

Ethridge Leaves for Palestine

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—Mark Ethridge left by plane today for Palestine confident that "we can accomplish permanent peace and stability in the Middle East."

Ethridge expects to be away from the United States for three months.

Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal and United States representative on the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, expects to be away from the United States for three months.

He said he planned to reach Athens Monday morning, and would board a special United Nations plane for Palestine, arriving there Monday noon.

The U. N. commission was created last December to take over duties of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, acting U. N. mediator for Palestine, after an armistice has been arranged in the Palestine fighting.

Paraguay's Ruler Upset

Leandro Prieto.

Manuel Talavera, president of the Colorado Party's governing board, fled to the Argentine Embassy.

Turmoil has been almost constant in Paraguay for the last 12 years. Disastrous civil war flared for five months in 1947. One revolution followed another last year. In one of them Gonzalez, backed by the army, toppled Higinio Morinigo from the presidency, charging that the President was plotting to interfere with the transfer of power through democratic elections.

Gonzalez then placed Manuel Frutos, president of the Supreme Court, in the executive office until he was able to take over the presidency himself, last August 15.

Less than three months later, a bloody revolution led by Col. Carlos Montanaro tried to unseat Gonzalez. Casualties were in the hundreds, but never were announced officially. The rebellion finally was crushed.

The American attaches in London are Gen. John W. Leonard, Col. John Ackerman and Commodore Tully Shelley.

Two Socialist Parties Gain In Israel Vote

NYHT News Service

Tel Aviv, Jan. 30.—Israel's two Socialist labor parties—Mapai and Mapam — registered impressive gains in final tabulation today of the 427,027 ballots cast in the state's first general election.

Supported by a heavy army vote, Mapam climbed into second place among Israel's 21 parties, and Mapai fortified its position as the state's dominant political faction. Together the labor parties will control more than half of the seats in Israel's new 120-member constituent assembly.

Tabulation of the last 40 per cent of the vote, which included all Israeli armed forces, permitted Mapam to surpass the United Religious coalition slate. It polled 63,107 or 14.7 per cent of the total.

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's moderate Mapai slate obtained 152,972 votes, or 35.8 per cent.

The United Religious ticket dropped to 12.3 per cent and registered a final total of 52,633.

The right wing Heruth, or freedom movement, gained slightly, but was unable to advance from fourth place. It polled 49,202 votes, or 11.5 per cent.

Death Toll Cut to 4

Tokyo, Jan. 30 (AP).—The known dead in a U. S. Air Force barracks fire at Yokota air base early today was cut from 5 to four tonight. Five were burned seriously and 12 slightly.

Court Asked To Review Christ's Trial

Jerusalem, Jan. 30 (AP).—A Dutchman who signs himself "H187" has asked the supreme court of Israel to review the trial of Jesus Christ.

The judges are reluctant to discuss the petition and responsible observers in Jerusalem believe it is extremely doubtful there will be any review of the nearly 2,000-year-old trial.

The petition, in the form of a 15-page memorandum dated December 15, 1948, assumes the Israel supreme court, established last September is the direct and legal successor to the Jewish high court under the Romans which sentenced Jesus to die on the cross for blasphemy.

Court president Dr. Moshe Smoira said it was unfortunate that publicity had been given the petition since there might be an impression, which he said would be wrong, that the court was treating it lightly.

There were indications, however, that the five-man court intends to send a reply to the petitioner.

Dr. Smoira said the appeal was inclosed in a covering letter signed by H. A. Robbe Groskamp of Santpoort, Holland.

Nanking Like an Open City

ing steadily toward that status.

Observers touring the Yangtse River front found no indications of defense preparations. On the contrary, it was obvious that most naval units, which had been guarding the big river against a Red crossing had already gone.

The Twentieth Army was quietly withdrawn to the south bank and moved east in the direction of Shanghai.

The Red forces still were sitting about 6 miles north of Nanking, having made no move for a week.

The government's peace pleas were given a staggering blow by the Communists' broadcast of Saturday, insisting that arrest of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and others on the Reds' "war criminals" list must precede negotiations.

The five-man national peace delegation which acting President Li named after Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's debatable retirement January 21, was widely scattered.

One of its chief members, General Chang Chih-chung, had flown to his northwest headquarters in Lanchow. A source close to the acting president confirmed that Chang had been authorized to discuss a new commercial treaty with Russia covering Sinkiang Province.

This added to the mystery of the Russian attitude towards the government and the Communists.

The Soviet Ambassador, N. V. Roschin, had been scheduled to fly Sunday to Canton—the only major foreign diplomat to do so. Instead, he postponed his departure at the last minute and sent his embassy counselor. The American and other western embassies are remaining in Nanking and sending counselors or ministers to the new seat of government at Canton.

Both Soviet Embassy sources and the Chinese foreign office said Roschin would go to Canton Tuesday; should he do so, it would be a diplomatic stroke in favor of the government.

Green Says AFL Studying Labor Bill

Miami, Fla., Jan. 30 (U.P.).—President William Green of the American Federation of Labor said today the AFL was withholding approval of the Administration labor bill until it has given it a "very careful study."

On his arrival here to attend the annual winter meeting of the 13-member executive council of the AFL, opening tomorrow, Green said the council was opposed to President Truman's "one package" labor bill and a "few things in it."

"The AFL was and is for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law," he said, "and we think that should have been done separately. We're studying this new package, particularly the legal aspects, and can't support it until we get advice from counsel."

AFL to Consider Joint Action Plans

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Miami, Fla., Jan. 30.—Two proposals involving joint effort with the rival Congress of Industrial Organizations face the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, which opens a 10-day session here Monday.

The first proposal is the suggestion of CIO President Phil Murray that the AFL and CIO combine forces behind a unified legislative program in the current session of Congress.

To this suggestion the AFL 15-man council is expected to react as it has to similar offers in the past—in the negative. AFL leaders have felt that their organization can get more out of Congress by pressing its own case rather than tying up with the CIO.

It has also been the sentiment of the AFL leaders that organic unity—that is, a merger of the two organizations—must precede collaboration on a national scale.

The issue of cooperating with the CIO comes up again, from another angle, in considering formation of an anti-Communist trade union federation representing the democratic countries of the world.

The AFL stayed out of the World Federation of Trade Unions, which was quickly dominated by Communist and pro-Communist delegations. Last week the CIO, British Trade Union Congress and the Netherlands Federation of Labor quit the WFTU.

Both AFL and CIO would like to participate in a new non-Communist international labor movement. To be resolved is the custom of certain world groups—like the International Labor Organization—in recognizing only the dominant union body within each country. It is believed the AFL, somewhat larger numerically than the CIO, would be willing to give ground on this issue and accept another formula.

Basic purposes of the council meeting is to work out a legislative program for the year in light of the last convention mandates. There'll also be a special meeting of the AFL administrative committee which supervises Labor's League for Political Education to discuss campaign strategy in those States with "little Taft-Hartley Acts." Presidents of State AFL federations in the South will attend this meeting.

Another highlight will be renewed discussion of the possible return to the AFL of the 750,000-member International Association of Machinists, which left the AFL in a jurisdictional dispute with the Carpenters several years ago.

The AFL council will also conduct hearings into charges of Communist influence within the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress, which is made up primarily of the AFL locals in Canada. George Morrison, president of the Railway Clerks, has been a leading critic of the Canadian affiliate's actions.

Ellender Hits Strike Writ Repeal Plan

By The Associated Press

Democratic Senator Ellender (La.) said yesterday the Administration's new labor bill would leave the country "practically defenseless" against national emergency strikes and please men like John L. Lewis."

But Republican Senator Morse (Oreg.) praised the proposal in the bill which would get rid of the Taft-Hartley law's court injunction weapon against such strikes. It would be replaced by a voluntary 30-day "cooling-off" procedure.

Morse told a reporter he likes the new measure's "emphasis on voluntary procedures."

Secretary of Labor Tobin is scheduled to go before the Senate Labor Committee this morning to discuss the Administration bill. The session promises to be a stormy one.

Senator Taft (R., Ohio), senior minority member of the committee, already has termed the proposed substitute for dealing with national paralysis strikes a "milk and water" measure. Taft, co-author of the Taft-Hartley law, is a leader of the antirepeal forces.

Under the Administration's plan for dealing with critical work stoppages, the President would appoint an emergency board to try to settle the dispute and make a report with recommendations.

The President would ask that there be no strike during a 30-day period while the board was at work and while its report was being studied by the disputants.

There would be no penalty for rejection of the board's recommendations and no provision for injunctions. The Government would count on moral force to bring acceptance of the settlement recommendations.

Ellender predicted that Congress will reject the proposal to ditch the injunction in national emergency strikes.

"It would leave us practically defenseless," Ellender said, "by substituting something that, in my opinion, would not be effective in most cases.

"It would please men like John L. Lewis. This is just the sort of thing they are looking for."

Ellender said it was Lewis, chief of the United Mine Workers, that Congress had particularly in mind in writing the injunction provision into the Taft-Hartley law in 1947.

Morse, a member of the Labor Committee, said the Administration's proposal in this regard is along the lines of a plan he was thinking about offering.

Cathedral Stall Will Honor Berkeley

A hand carved oak verger's stall was dedicated at the Washington Cathedral yesterday in recognition of James Platt Berkeley's 25 years as cathedral verger.

Berkeley

As verger, Berkeley is responsible for the cathedral building, preparation for and conduct of services, and supervision of all persons whose work has to do with care of the building.

Plans for the dedication were kept a secret from Berkeley, who ordinarily knows details of every event planned for the cathedral.

Carved on the verger's stall are figures of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, the coat of arms of the cathedral, and a shield bearing a bunch of keys, symbol of the verger's duties.

The Very Rev. John Wallace Suter, dean of the cathedral, conducted the brief dedicatory service and used a prayer especially written for the occasion.

Berkeley, who was present as a choir boy when the foundation stone of the cathedral was laid in 1907, became verger of the cathedral in 1924. Since then he has seen that altar and sanctuary appointments for each service are correct, choir boys' vestments clean and ready, heat and lights on, and the procession ready on time.

Realty Men Asked To Fight Evictions

By the United Press

Representative Wright Patman of Texas, a high ranking Democrat on the House Banking Committee, yesterday called on the big real estate associations to "scream out" against mass evictions by landlords seeking to get rid of rent controls.

Frank Cortwright, head of the National Association of Home Builders, promptly dubbed the evictions "unreasoning and unprincipled." He said that if unchecked they would whip up sentiment for an even stronger rent control law.

But Herbert U. Nelson, spokesman for the National Association of Real Estate Boards, said the evictions were "evidence that a lot of people are not going to tolerate the injustice of President Truman's unfair deal for eight million property owners."

Nelson predicted there will be "all kinds of rebellions by a lot of people" against "unjust" rent controls. But he insisted his organization had nothing to do with the mass evictions which started in Tulsa, Okla., and threaten to reach epidemic proportions.

The Government is preparing to go to court to contest the evictions which it believes are a clear violation of the present rent law. Meanwhile the Justice Department is looking into the "Tulsa plan" to see whether there is any conspiracy to violate the Rent Act or other laws.

Patman, whose committee will soon begin hearings on a bill to strengthen rent controls and extend them until March 31, 1951, told a reporter the eviction campaign will "boomerang" on its originators. He said that many other Congressmen hold similar views.

He said he had "noticed the real estate lobby hasn't condemned" the mass eviction plan, now started or under consideration in eight cities.

National Security Week Indorsed as Public Reminder

By the United Press

Air Secretary W. Stuart Symington yesterday indorsed National Security Week as a valuable means of reminding Americans of "the priceless liberties which we must preserve."

The February 12-22 observance is sponsored by the Reserve Officers Association to stimulate public consciousness of security needs.

Curtis Conservatory Damaged by Flames

Philadelphia, Jan. 30 (AP).—Fire damaged the Curtis Institute of Music today and heavy smoke from the blaze drove nearly 150 guests from their suites in the fashionable Barclay Hotel.

The conservatory's collection of music and musical instruments was untouched.

Strike Threatens Gas Supplies

New York, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Some 100 tugboat workers struck the Reinauer Transportation Co. in Staten Island today, threatening to cut off gas supplies to 93,000 Brooklyn families and commercial consumers.

The Brooklyn Borough Gas Co., which serves that borough, depends on Reinauer for oil deliveries. The company said it has only a 12-day supply of oil on hand and that it the strike continues it would be unable to manufacture gas for its customers.

The strike is an outgrowth of the city tugboat dispute settled early this month. The Reinauer Company granted a 12 per cent wage increase, but balked at other points in the agreement.

Sagging White House

The White House has been the official residence of our Presidents for nearly 150 years. Following the capture of Washington by the British in 1814 the structure was fired by the invaders and only the walls left standing. However, the building was restored and Americans by the thousands have made pilgrimages to view this historic structure that has survived the vicissitudes of war and the ravages of time.

Now the White House is falling to pieces. Structural weaknesses make it necessary to tear out the interior and do a complete job of rebuilding, except for the outside walls. A completely modern structure would cost less than half the estimated expense of reconstruction within the old shell. But this economical solution of the President's housing problem would destroy the intangible value of a building that has come to be regarded by the American people as a symbol of the enduring quality of their governmental institutions. Sentimental attachments of this sort are all the stronger in a country that has few monuments that connect its present with its past. For that reason it is virtually certain that Congress will vote the funds needed to carry out the work of reconstruction.

Discussion of restoration plans should not, however, divert attention from the shocking discoveries made by the architects and engineers who have been inspecting the White House. Except for good luck, the entire building might have collapsed, bringing death or injury to the President and his family and possibly to visitors. Responsibility for such a tragedy would have rested on the architects and builders who carried out repair and modernization work with a criminal disregard for the weakening effects of new installations on an ageing structure.

Periodic and thoroughgoing inspection of the White House would have exposed its structural defects long ago, and prompt corrective action might have averted progressive deterioration. Instead, the emphasis has been put on superficial improvements that often concealed basic defects. It is to be hoped, therefore, that when Congress votes the funds required to make the White House a safe and comfortable residence, it will remember that this reconstructed building will last much longer if thoroughgoing inspections are required frequently and adequate funds made available for repairs and improvements as soon as they are needed.

Disaster In The West

The catastrophic blizzards and intense cold which descended upon the Rocky Mountain and Great Plains regions belong pretty clearly to the category of disasters described by lawyers as "acts of God." The severity of the winter in those regions seems to surpass anything of which there is record; yet there is nothing to suggest that human interferences with nature, such as deforestation, which have been blamed for real or fancied changes in the climate of other parts of the world, have had anything to do with the invasion and prolonged occupation of the West by these great masses of Arctic air and the burial of so vast and important an area beneath one huge and hard-frozen snowfall upon another. The knowledge that the disaster could not have been foreseen or avoided does nothing, of course, to mitigate the suffering it has brought to animals and human beings or the tremendous problem of relief presented to the rest of the country. The economic loss through the destruction or starvation of sheep and cattle in the grazing country is incalculable and will be felt for years by the whole Nation through the aggravation and prolongation of the meat shortage. Whole herds have apparently been annihilated, some have been severely depleted, and nearly all the surviving animals no doubt have been starved or otherwise reduced to a condition that will interfere seriously with breeding.

Nevertheless, it is possible that the ultimate effects of the blizzards may be as much beneficial as injurious. Nearly all the States within the present area of distress had been suffering from severe water shortages which the eventual melting of the snow seems likely to remove. In the mountain States, which depend upon irrigation for agriculture, exhausted water reserves will be replenished and a surplus assured. The afflicted plains area includes the region of the notorious Dust Bowl in which the dangerous practice of wheat cultivation was resumed during the recent war. In this region the snow will provide some of the reserve moisture which is necessary to any reclamation or preservation of the soil.

But in the river valleys farther east it may be a different story. A great part of the blizzard area drains into the Red River or other tributaries of the Missouri and thence into the Mississippi. Thus another vast disaster in a way of floods may be in preparation. Certainly this danger should be taken into account in the plans for the tremendous and costly relief project which the treachery of nature has forced upon us.

Labor Relations Bill

The Administration's labor relations bill will be a keen disappointment, we suspect, to Congress and to a large segment of the people. Its critical defect is that it would take the country back to one-sided regulation of labor relations. Instead of preserving those sections of the Taft-Hartley Act that are sound and progressive, the Administration is moving backward toward many abuses which cost it the election of 1946.

It is impossible, of course, to discuss all the provisions of the bill in a single editorial, and we do not intend to attempt it. The character of the bill is amply suggested, however, by the fact that it would no longer require unions to bargain in good faith; it would drop the ban on the coercion of workers; it would limit the unfair practices for which unions could be penalized to certain secondary boycotts and strikes in jurisdictional disputes to upset a certified union or force an employer to disobey an NLRB order. The sound provisions requiring an accounting by unions to their members would be swept away. The section on political contributions would be returned to a frankly biased restraint on corporations with no restraint whatever on unions. Even the constructive work of the Conciliation Service would be impaired by returning it to the Labor Department.

The nature of the bill is perhaps most strikingly illustrated by the provisions dealing with national emergencies. In six cases the Administration last year went to the courts for injunctions to save the country from the disastrous effects of strikes imperiling the national welfare. Now the President proposes to sweep away this power and leave the avoidance of catastrophe to the discretion of employers and union leaders. His bill provides that when he notes a national emergency because of a strike or threatened strike, he may issue a proclamation and appoint an emergency fact-finding board. The board would have to bring in its findings and recommendations in not more than 25 days. During that period and for five additional days, the bill says, "the parties to the dispute shall continue or resume work and operations under the terms and conditions of employment which were in effect immediately prior to the beginning of the dispute . . ." But if they should refuse, the President would be left with no means whatever of requiring compliance.

It is not difficult to imagine John L. Lewis hastening to find an opportunity to thumb his nose at this provision if it should become law. The present act is weak in that it permits only temporary restraint of strikes in industries vital to the national safety and welfare. Should Congress pull the only teeth it has, ruthless labor leaders will defy the Government and dictate their own terms by crippling essential industries. We do not believe that Congress will so submerge the national welfare to the demands of a single group.

The whole bill needs to be recast so that it will impartially serve the public interest rather than the narrower interests of labor alone. The Administration is making the same kind of mistake that Representative Case and Senator Taft made in 1947. It is sponsoring a reactionary sweep of the pendulum, which, if successful, will stimulate new demands for overly drastic legislation. The responsible course, as we see it, is to preserve what is good in the present law and strike out only those portions that unnecessarily hamper unions in the exercise of their right to bargain collectively.

Legislating Courts

Nothing less than a decision by the Supreme Court can resolve the issues in the Baltimore press gag cases. This thought is implicit in the verdict of Maryland Circuit Judge John B. Gray finding three radio stations and a news commentator guilty of contempt of Rule 904 of the Baltimore Supreme Bench. It seems to us unthinkable that the Supreme Court, on the basis of past decisions, will uphold this narrow interpretation of the Constitution. The certainty of an appeal does not lessen, however, the serious implications of what in our opinion is an illogical and dangerous decision.

Judge Gray found that the broadcast of details of the confession and past criminal record of Eugene H. James before his trial for the murder of Marsha Brill constituted "not merely a clear and present danger to the administration of justice, but deprived [the defendant] of his constitutional right to a fair trial." Even if this were true, which is by no means clear, it would not be an excuse for a blanket rule that treats all cases alike.

The courts have always had the power to punish for contempt when cases of clear and present danger to the administration of justice have arisen, and this power has been invoked in Baltimore several times. It is a power to be used sparingly, however, and in the context of individual cases rather than as an all-encompassing affair. There are many factors which may influence jurors, including prejudices, gossip and rumors arising from a muzzled press. It is the job of the courts to guard against the injection of these factors into a trial. What the Baltimore Supreme Bench has done and the Maryland circuit judge has condoned, however, is to legislate far beyond the legitimate considerations of clear and present danger. The Baltimore gag rule handicaps the innocent with the guilty, and it prohibits the publication of information which may have little or no bearing upon a fair trial.

Judge Gray's verdict made use of the constitutional guarantee of a fair trial. There is also a constitutional guarantee against abridgment of freedom of the press. Neither right is exclusive. Just as the courts administer justice, so the press informs the people about the conduct of the courts and public officials. Both agencies serve the public interest. When the functions of either are distorted out of their proper relationship, then the very foundations of free society themselves are undermined.

Case Of M. Joliot-Curie

It looks very much as though a new heresy has developed within the Communist Party and that we soon may hear of another series of autos da fe such as followed the rise of Trotskyism, Bucharinism, Rykovism, Lovestonism, Browderism, Mintonism, Titoism and the various other major and minor heresies of the last two decades. The latest heresiarch is Prof. Frederick Joliot-Curie, well-known nuclear scientist and one-time assistant to the famous Mme. Curie, discoverer of radium, whose daughter he married and whose name he combined with his own. Professor Joliot-Curie is credited with several experiments which played some part in preparing the way for the discovery of atomic energy. However, since the professor for several years had manifested strong fellow-traveling sympathies, and early in 1945 announced that he was joining the Communist Party, his work has been pretty well snubbed by the British and American Governments, especially since the Canadian spy revelations. But in spite of his record, General de Gaulle three years ago appointed M. Joliot-Curie head of the new French Atomic Energy Commission.

A few weeks ago M. Joliot-Curie assured press correspondents that any atomic secrets the French scientists may discover will not be betrayed to Soviet Russia or to any other foreign power until a way had been found to outlaw atomic warfare entirely. If, as a Communist, said M. Joliot-Curie, he was ordered by the party to betray such secrets he would withdraw from the party.

Now, what was considerably more startling than M. Joliot-Curie's protestation that he puts the interests of the nation above those of the party, was the Communist response to it. He was immediately assailed for his attitude by France-Soir and by L'Humanite. For perhaps the first time these party organs made a forthright avowal of the principle that obedience to the wishes of the Kremlin transcends any duty to the national interest. It was soon rumored that the professor's card had been called up and that he had been asked to answer charges of "Titoism" formally brought against him. M. Jacques Duclos, who is frequently chosen as the mouthpiece for the doctrinal pronouncements of the Kremlin, joined the attack. Without mentioning M. Joliot-Curie by name, M. Duclos expressed his pious horror that a member of the party could so insult the future and the materialist interpretation of history as to put "the Soviet Union, land of socialism," into the same category as "the United States, land of imperialism." Every true Communist, said M. Duclos, has two countries, "his own and the Soviet Union."

It will be recalled that a similar attack by M. Duclos, translated and republished in the Communist press in the United States, preceded the trial for heresy and excommunication of Mr. Earl Browder. Thus there is every reason to believe that the stage has been set for the condemnation and expulsion of M. Joliot-Curie. Perhaps, M. Joliot-Curie had anticipated something of the sort when he made his address to the correspondents.

Thus we are led to conjectures concerning his motives. Ever since the schism between Marshal Tito by the Cominform, rumors have been growing of a division within the French Communist Party. One faction, which is said to include M. Thorez, the titular leader of French communism, fears that the present conduct of the party must eventually alienate a considerable portion of its popular support as it becomes more and more evident to the French workers that the party is being used as an instrument of the Soviet foreign policy rather than as an organ of the French working class. Upon this group the apparently successful defiance of the Kremlin by Marshal Tito seems to have made a profound impression. The other group, whose leader is said to be M. Marty, wishes to make the party an even more militant instrument of the Kremlin. It is possible, too, that the case of M. Joliot-Curie may be connected with the distinctions now being drawn in the party propaganda between Marxist science and bourgeois-imperialist science.

Loyalty Fizzle

The District Commissioners' Loyalty Committee has brought in a sensible report recommending complete abandonment of the program of checking the records of District employes for subversive activity. Its reasoning seems to us unassailable. If there is no more disloyalty among District employes than among Federal employes, a preliminary check on those holding so-called sensitive positions would turn up only nine cases and not one of these would be serious enough to warrant any action. Since it would be contrary to all logic and experience to assume that there is more disloyalty among District workers than among those in the national service, this ought to end the matter. The surprising thing is that the Commissioners did not do this bit of common-sense reasoning for themselves in the first place.

The Liberal Paradox

THE POLITICAL TRADITION OF THE WEST, by Frederick Watkins. (Harvard University Press, $5.)

To Professor Watkins' liberalism means freedom under law. Thus the political fact is older than the political use of the name. Political freedom, our professor believes, is something that was made possible by the counterpoise of church and state in the Middle Ages. The triumph of Christianity imposed a universal dualism upon the European imagination. The distinction drawn by the church between the divine and human natures of Christ was extended into the division between the spiritual and worldly concerns of the Christian and ultimately into the distinction between society and government. Constitutional government, as we understand the term, arose from the limitations placed upon the power of secular rulers by the organized conscience of Christendom as represented by the church. This organization, according to Professor Watkins, became possible through the collapse of the Western Empire, which made necessary the intervention of the ecclesiastical power in temporal affairs, and here, it seems, lies the contrast between the politico-religious experiences of Latin and Byzantine Christendom.

In the West, indeed, it appeared for a time that the historical process, whereby the Byzantine church became the instrument of Imperial rule, might be reversed, and that secular princes might become mere instruments of the temporal ambitions of the Holy See; but this tendency was presently arrested by the growth of the national monarchies. From the precarious balance thus established between the moral and political orders, and rationalized into the legal system inherited from Roman antiquity, all the characteristic patterns of Western civilization have been derived and were already manifest before the close of the Middle Ages. The balance, however, was disturbed by the general secularization of life which followed from the anthropocentric ideals introduced by the Renaissance and was wholly upset by the division of Western Christendom following the Reformation. The subsequent history of Western political thought, says our professor, may be described in terms of an effort to restore the balance by one means or another.

Thus the rise of political absolutism in western Europe was coincident with the rise of humanism in the intellectual sphere, and the doctrine of divine right was fostered by the great conflict of Reformation and Counter-Reformation in the later sixteenth and earlier seventeenth centuries, when both Protestant and Catholics invoked the aid of secular rulers for the preservation of one faith and the suppression of the other. The very nature of such alliances diminished or destroyed the power of organized Christianity to restrain the will and ambition of princes. Yet the existence of religious minorities in all countries gave rise to a new theory which sought to restore the equilibrium. This was doctrine of social contract and of natural rights, first elaborated by the Jesuits as a challenge to the absolutist pretensions of Protestant monarchs and quickly adopted by Protestant minorities in their conflicts with Catholic rulers. This theory, which exalted the parliaments as the moral voice of the community over monarchs, led to the doctrine of the separation of powers as formulated by Locke and Montesquieu. It had immediate success only in England; for elsewhere the parliamentary institutions were local rather than national and too weak to resist the centralized power of the kings. The seventeenth century moralists justified their doctrine of natural rights by the law of reason. Thus they opened the way for the philosophy of the Enlightenment, which supposed that the universal reign of reason would prove an effective substitute for the unity of faith that had been such a check upon political power in the Middle Ages, and the new mechanistic cosmology appeared to give this notion scientific authority. But the triumph of rationalism and the doctrine of progress led to the French revolutionary terror and to the Napoleonic despotism and thence to reaction under the forms of fideism and romanticism. Similarly, with the political history of the nineteenth century: The doctrine of the general will became the cult of nationalism, the triumph of middle class capitalism led to imperialism, historical romanticism to Marxism.

Now the reason that each of these formulas almost defeated the end for which it was conceived, our professor tells us, is this: Besides its characteristic dualism the Western mind has inherited from its Christian experience an apocalyptic vision. When this vision becomes focused upon worldly rather than other-worldly ends it gives rise in the political order to the missionary zeal that the mediaeval church applied had to the work of spiritual salvation. Thus every movement to restore the traditional dualism upon which freedom depends ends by becoming an absolutism and a threat to freedom; the most formidable examples are found in the great totalitarian dictatorships, engendered within the dualistic liberal tradition. Christianity, our professor believes, is now too weakened by defections and divisions to oppose a sufficiently powerful moral resistance to dictatorship. Accordingly, he places his hope in the development of some secular ritual and ethical system comparable to Confucianism, which delivered China from a similar danger more than 2000 years ago. Thus it is a bit curious that Professor Watkins, in his historical examination of Western political ideas, does not mention August Comte, who seems to have had much the same notion.

Letters To The Editor

"The Initiative Is Ours"

The January 21 editorial "The Initiative Is Ours" gives vigorous support to Mr. Truman's concept of positive and creative action in the fight for men's minds. Put into action, the President's words may well mark a turning point in history, and for his courage and vision all who hold dear the free way of life must say a fervent Amen.

The editorial goes on to say, "the inevitable . . . is a world resting on law, a league of free men, a community made visible out of nation states." Obviously pleased that Mr. Truman no longer talks about a republic of the world, and having disposed of even aspirations to that broader goal the editorial continues "the hope of man lies in union." It is our prayer that in the Truman Administration an effort will be made to replace the sovereignty of nation states with a sovereignty of free men."

Obeisance having been made earlier to a world resting on law, the editorial indorses the idea of "tools and the man" and hopes "this time the opportunity will not be meanly lost."

It sounds so fine, and then you read it over, carefully, analytically! Who are these "free men" to whom sovereignty is to be given, and who will frame a world law and a world community? Is Nehru one, or Romulo, those gifted men who only recently in Delhi spoke the aspirations of Asia and the struggling masses of mankind for whose minds and allegiance we fight?

What of the Pan American world—with its spotty record of democratic behavior but its even larger influence in the affairs of a shrunken globe. Do these merit no voice in framing this world of law and freedom? What happens to the U. N. when the full impact of this selective "messianism" comes into full flower? As union of the free goes up does the rest of the world automatically and peacefully say "wonderful, wonderful! If we have faith and behave ourselves someday we, too, may be entitled to freedom under a reign of law."

Does one go forward by closing one's eyes and taking a step backward to embrace an Americanized version of remodeled Pax Britannica? Nostaligia for the dear dead days can blind even the keenest eye to the ugly facts of global life, circa 1950; to the rise of subject peoples and the destructive genius of science held in leash by the perilously thin thread of internation diplomacy. It is a picture for a Victorian parlor, complete with rose wood footstool, antimacassar and a cross-stitched motto on the wall—"God's in His heaven, all's right with our world."

Assembly-Line Clinics

The cancer clinic is a fine thing as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough. One of the most intelligent steps forward the medical profession could take is to set up an assembly line clinic where really complete physical and mental examinations could be given by experts at a minimum cost to doctor and patient. It should include examination for heart disease, insanity, venereal disease, etc. Blood should be typed. Mass production could be the solution to low-priced health production, just as it is to industrial.

In the meantime, the cancer clinics should not state they give complete physical examinations, because they do not; and the results should be given directly to the patient, instead of forcing him to go to another doctor and pay more money to get them.

Truman's Snub

Presumably reliable reports indicate that President Truman deliberately snubbed Governor Thurmond during the inaugural parade. If this is true, it indicates a smallness of sportsmanship incompatible with the high office which he holds, and is at variance with the democratic principles which he professes.

Many of us Southerners disagreed with some of his tenets before and during the election, we still do, and shall continue to do so. But as loyal Americans (and there are none more loyal than those of the South) we respect the high office which he holds.

Since the President and Messrs. Acheson and McGrath are making the Bible so prominent a part of the Administration's utterances, it would be well for the President to read the many passages therein relating to the foregiveness of one's enemies. A. S. JAUCHLER,
New Orleans.

Religion In The Schools

Edward Gray, in his letter published January 20, notes that "during the early years of the nineteenth century, various denominations held religious services in the legislative halls of the State Capitol, with permission of the Virginia Legislature."

In sarcastically suggesting that "the United States Constitution was not well understood in those days," he apparently implies that the Supreme Court, in its recent ruling against religious instruction in the public schools, has departed from the original intent of our founding fathers.

I am happy to point out to him that, "in the early years of the nineteenth century," the Bill of Rights upon which that decision was based was not applicable to the acts of the State Legislatures. Its provisions, originally applicable only to acts of Congress, were extended to cover the State Legislatures by the adoption of the fourteenth amendment in 1868. Unfortunately, it is in these days that the United States Constitution is sometimes "not well understood." HOLTON R. SMALL.

"Paradox Of Force And Freedom"

It is surprising that so important and thought-inducing an article as that appearing in The Washington Post of January 9, entitled "The Paradox of Force and Freedom," has elicited no discussion in your columns. The article, a reprint from the Atlantic Monthly, was written by President James Bryant Conant of Harvard University.

Dr. Conant considers the question, "Can there be a moral basis for freedom in a world of force?" He regards "the distinction between the ethics of war and the ethics of peace" as "a fundamental postulate of our free society" and is deeply concerned with "the logical inconsistency of the traditional American attitude toward force and freedom."

I am constrained, with deference, to call into question both the soundness of the postulate and the existence of the "inconsistency."

The attainment of peace has been and is gradual, evolutionary. Before nations existed the chief kept the peace within the tribe, when necessary by force. Before tribes existed "the old man" kept peace within the family, when necessary by force. Robberies and killings were fatal to the defense powers of the family, tribe and nation. They had to be eliminated.

An important phase of the evolution of peace is familiar as the posse stage in the recent past of our own West. Posses using force were a necessary means for peace until the police and courts caught up with the pioneers.

The world in its struggle toward peace is today in the posse stage, both world wars having been illustrations on an enormous scale of posse action, on the Allied side.

These world-shaking efforts were equivalent, as respects moral sanctions, to the use of force to arrest a local bandit chief. We must not be confused by the immense scale of world war into the impression that there is a difference in principle.

Whenever methods of persuasion fail, in local, national and world spheres of action alike, the long-range necessities of the public interest demand the use of force in our most civilized, most Christian nations as the sole means for peace. If we are unable to get along without police and courts on the local and national planes, it seems folly to dream at this or any other time to get along without force on the international plane. Selfish, aggressive and violent elements must be restrained. When moral appeal fails, strength is the answer.

Strength must be exerted through decrees of a world court enforcible through world police agencies, instead of by readiness for war, at the earliest possible moment. Shall we now entertain doubt of the moral right of this Nation to join with others to protect themselves from men of bandit character who gain possession of great nations? To do so would likewise by implication be to doubt the moral validity of the maintenance of local and State criminal courts and police officers.

Many flirt with the doctrine of nonresistance. But few believe in it enough to adopt it in the ordinances of their cities. In truth it is clear that we cannot give a blank check to the criminal elements of society on any of its planes.

Surely we are confronted with no paradox or inconsistency here. The ethics of peace and that of war are but a single ethics, the use of force when necessary to protect society against malefactors.

Perhaps humanity cannot take these last most difficult steps to peace on the world plane. Perhaps the necessary vision, coordination and devotion are not to be found. But we must act boldly in the belief that they will be found for, if they are not, men seem about to subject themselves to tyranny or to lapse into a barbarism perhaps worse than that of primitive ages.

Even to begin to live up to our responsibilities, we must get our thinking straight. We cannot prevail if we are qualmish or confused as to the moral character of our defense. America, more than any other country in any age, must now feel an assurance of the rectitude of her course. And she is entitled to have and to rest upon such assurance. EUGENE W. BURR.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Background Of The Pact

BY THE time the North Atlantic Security Pact comes up for debate in the Senate about a year will have passed since the idea, in the form of the Vandenberg Resolution, first became a practical proposition in the United States. As preparation for the debate it will be useful to recall what happened last winter to inspire the Vandenberg Resolution, and what has happened since.

Lippmann

It is, I think, clear that the decisive event was the overthrow of the Benes government in Czechoslovakia by the Communists acting under the direct orders of Moscow. To be sure Mr. Bevin had proposed the Western Union before that, but it was the Czechoslovak coup that brought this country around to the idea of joining a sort of an alliance.

THE OUTRAGE so wantonly committed against the Czechoslovak Republic did more than arouse indignation. There seemed to be no way to explain the coup except as a military action in preparation for war. For the Benes government, though a democracy, was a diplomatic ally of the Soviet Union, and in the diplomatic struggle between East and West had remained, no doubt with reluctance and misgivings, within the Soviet diplomatic system. There was no sufficient reason for the overthrow of this government unless it was that Moscow expected a war, and knew that the Czechoslovak army and people could not be depended on.

The interpretation of the coup in military terms has been questioned by some. But at the time it seemed the only prudent way to look at it. That view was strengthened by the fact that almost simultaneously Stalin was reported to be making demands of a strategical character on Finland. Everyone knew that in case of war the control of the Baltic Sea and of the famous Bohemian quadrilateral in Czechoslovakia would be of crucial importance.

IN THIS country the reaction to these events was strong. Not only did they insure the adoption of the European Recovery Program and of the Vandenberg Resolution but, also, they brought about American rearmament based—and this was almost certainly of the highest importance — on conscription. The willingness of Congress to draft men, not merely to appropriate money, was the kind of action which made it plain to all the world that this country was seriously aroused.

All that happened last spring. Since then the expectation of war has greatly diminished. In some ways the most notable fact about the Berlin blockade has been the cumulative evidence that the Russians were using it for political reasons, not for military. It is recognized by all the allied intelligence services that though the Berlin blockade created great diplomatic tension, there has been no evidence that the Red army was preparing to invade western Europe, nor that it was thinking of strangling the airlift, nor that it was provoking incidents or that it was willing to be provoked by incidents.

THERE IS, on the contrary, more and more evidence that if last winter the Russians expected war, they have since then decided definitely to avoid war. Almost all stories about what goes on inside the Kremlin are secondhand and not to be taken too literally. But the President's idea that there has been a division in the Kremlin on the question of war and peace is probably not mere wishful thinking.

There are the outward and visible signs of a change of attitude since the Czechoslovak coup, one of the earliest and most significant being that the demands on Finland were not pressed very far and were settled moderately. There is striking testimony from behind the Iron Curtain that there are no serious defensive preparations this side of the Soviet frontier, that the Czechoslovak armament industry is not fully incorporated in the Soviet military system, and that the Polish and Czechoslovak armies are not regarded as reliable by the Red generals. There is also a good deal of evidence that both on Berlin and on the Austrian treaty the Russians, though tough, are not uncompromising.

A WESTERN Communist, who is in a position to know a good deal, explained this change of attitude by saying that Stalin, who heads the more conciliatory faction, actually lost control of the Politburo in 1947 when the Marshall Plan was announced and the Cominform created; that at the first meeting of the Cominform the French and Italian Communist delegates were told by Zdhanov that war was inevitable and that they must prepare for it; that after the death of Zdhanov, however, Stalin regained a majority in the Politburo, and is again in control of Soviet policy.

I DO NOT know whether this story is a true account, or, if true, whether it explains what has happened. My own view is that if the Kremlin has decided not to have war, that decision was assisted mightily, indeed confirmed, by the American rearmament program based on conscription.

Of one thing there is, I believe, no doubt at all. It is that the Soviet attitude toward war is determined, not by tactical considerations but, by their estimate of the over-all potential power of the United States, and of our ability and willingness to develop it. That is to say they will not go to war or refrain from going to war because there are 20 divisions or five divisions in some particular place, because we have an air base 500 miles nearer or farther away, or because we have any particular number of atomic bombs. They do not like or respect much about this country. But the one thing they do respect, and indeed admire, is its industrial power, and as long as they are convinced that it could and would be mobilized fairly quickly against them, they will,—as the saying goes in eastern Europe—refrain from "providing the Western warmongers with a Pearl Harbor."

CONSIDERED against this background the North Atlantic Security Pact—if it is put in the context of a constructive and astute diplomatic action—would give a juridical shape to the actual situation.

It will do that most effectively if it is not overloaded with all manner of strategic boondoggling on the part of military theorists, not all of them in uniform, who would if they had their way, acquire bases on the moon—or at least on that artificial moon that someone has a blueprint for—and would pepper the earth with military missions, and would develop, if the Treasury did not go bankrupt, three omnipotent forces, each capable all by itself of winning not only a war but any war anywhere any time.

Matter of Fact

By Joseph Alsop

BELGRADE.—There is only one way to grasp what is happening in this little Balkan city, where the tough, handsome people striding untiringly through the snowy streets are so infinitely more impressive than their rather gimcrack capital. Belgrade is the center of world communism's first fully successful heresy. In Yugoslavia, Moscow has lost a vital strategic position. But this material loss is wholly overshadowed by the psychological menace of Marshal Tito as a sort of Communist Martin Luther.

This is only natural, moreover. In the language of Arnold Toynbee, the masters of the Kremlin claim the double role of rulers of a new universal state and high priests of a new universal church. As did the Incas, they employ as weapons both their religion and the sword. And it is precisely the combination of Red army and Communist Party that makes Soviet imperialism so formidable.

Here military power can always be resisted from without, as Soviet aggression is now being resisted by the West. But the worst danger to any dynamic new religion such as communism is always schism from within. Tito is now making such a schism. He thus threatens the peculiar combination that gives the Kremlin its real strength in a way that no one else can. And that is why the Kremlin and the Western World must both, from very different viewpoints, watch what is thappening in Yugoslavia with anxious attention.

AS EVERYONE knows by now, Tito first challenged the masters of the Kremlin in their role as rulers of a universal state. He was able to do because he and his comrades had forged their own Yugoslav Communist party, party apparatus and army in the very fires of war. But he was instantly excommunicated by the Cominform, because he insisted upon retaining his country's war-won independence.

What is curious and important is that this quarrel which began with a challenge to Moscow's temporal power is ending in a very different manner. At first, like all heretics, Tito claimed to be more orthodox in his theology than the high priests themselves. It is now known that he had a strong motive for doing so. He hoped that other national Communist parties would join his schism. He had sent agents out to other countries to win over allies. And the Gomulka episode in Poland and other signs suggest that his hopes were not wholly unreasonable.

Nonetheless, these first hopes of Tito's were disappointed, simply because the apparatus of every other national Communist party except perhaps that in China is directly controlled by the M. V. D. from Moscow. The disappointment stimulated Tito and his comrades to enter the second phase of every heretic's career. They have now begun to review the whole credo of their former faith, and to amend the entire theology to suit their own taste.

They call the result of these amendments "popular communism." Their central tenet, of course, is the flat rejection of Russian imperialism which has such vast strategic meaning. But there are other, even more interesting features.

TITO TAKES the word "popular" quite seriously. He now travels about the country, investigating the need of his people. He flays his officials for ignoring the interests of the masses. He has bitterly denounced the Kremlin's Machiavellianism. He has roundly attacked the rule that the ends justify the means. He has even announced that true communism must be a growth from the people upward, and not a flow of orders from the party downward.

Here is heresy indeed. Here is flat rejection of the dark new morality that led the Bolsheviks to leave the Socialist International in 1905. Furthermore, here is a logical heresy for Tito to promulgate.

In the eyes of the men of the Kremlin, behind their triple walls, hermetically isolated by their stern rings of guards, human beings must of course be reduced to mere numerals in lists of slaves in Siberian prison camps. But Tito has not experienced this terrible isolation. He has bravely led his people in a national struggle. He has shared danger and exchanged jokes with them in many a running battle and many a hidden camp. And thus it is natural if in Tito's eyes human beings are still human beings.

This does not mean that Yugoslavia is not and will not remain a tough police state. Yugoslav communism must be "popular" if the nation is to support Tito in his resistance to the Cominform. But the secret police must also continue to do their work, if only to prevent Tito from falling victim to the bullet of a Kremlin agent. On the other hand, what is happening here in Yugoslavia unquestionably means that certain members of the State Department are wrong when they argue that "Tito is just like all the other Communists." And thus the time has come for a very serious, practical re-examination of Western policy toward Yugoslavia.

Bank Sees Peril Lurking In Tax Boost

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—The proposed Federal budget may strain "the tax-paying capacity of our economy," the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York warns today in its January review.

The bank survey says: "Already the intensity of demand is subsiding noticeably in numerous directions. If this tendency continues, as eventually it must, the ceiling of tolerable taxation will drop accordingly.

"No one can foretell at what point any annoying burden will become a fatal deterrent to enterprise, but that such a point exists is beyond question and wise policy will certainly refrain from putting the matter to the test."

The Federal tax load this year under existing laws is expected to be only 8½ per cent below the wartime peak, the bank says. If the President's recommended four-billion-dollar tax increase is voted, the bank says it would "result in a Federal tax burden heavier than any experienced in wartime."

The bank opposes the President's suggestion for raising taxes on corporations and higher bracket incomes, saying that would cut off venture capital sources.

GOP Planning Town Meeting Of Senators

Senator Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.) said yesterday that both liberal and conservative Senate Republicans will be helped by a soul-searching "town meeting" on party policy.

To that end, he hopes to find some converts for the little band of 13 so-called "liberals" who have been fighting the Old Guard leadership since the present session began.

Tobey proposed the "town meeting" formula for the 42 Senate Republicans last week, mainly to bring about a talkfest on social legislation such as education, health and housing. He called those the "basic human needs," but some Republicans call them steps toward state socialism.

Senate Republisans in party conference agreed to have a meeting to talk it over. The Policy Committee, headed by Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, was told to set the time and place and agenda.

Interior Dept. Officials to Air Plans

Officials of the Interior Department get an opportunity this week to tell Congress about their plans, their policies and their problems.

A four-day hearing for that purpose, beginning today, is scheduled by the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. It will be held in the big caucus room of the Senate Office Building.

Headed by Secretary of Interior Krug, between 15 and 20 officials of the department have arranged to appear before the committee to give a detailed explanation of their work.

Committee Chairman O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) said he believes the hearings would serve greatly in the "mobilization of the country's natural resources for peace."

Testimony presented at the hearings will be of vital importance as a guide for legislation affecting the Interior Department which may be considered at this session of Congress, he said.

Members of the House Public Lands Committee—the counterpart of the Senate committee—have been invited to attend the hearings, along with State Governors.

O'Mahoney reiterated that the purpose of the hearings would be to "find a national policy on the conservation and utilization of our resources. We need raw materials to keep the United States strong while carrying out the international program for peace."

Two Planes Collide In Air, Flier Killed

Wellfleet, Mass., Jan. 30 (U.P.).—A Naval Reserve pilot was killed today, another parachuted to safety and a third crash-landed unhurt when two Avenger torpedo bombers locked wings in a spectacular collision 4000 feet above Cape Cod Bay.

The victim, Lieut. John M. Colgate, 27, of Winchester, perished in the waters of Wellfleet Harbor after bailing out of his disintegrating plane.

Ensign William E. MacIntyre, 26, of Boston, whose plane was in collision with Colgate's during a training flight of 10 craft from the Squantum Naval Air base, also parachuted but landed safely in a clump of trees near North Eastham.

A third pilot, Lieut. Allen R. Gittlin, 27, of Brookline, struck the debris of the mid-air collision, but managed to wrestle his disabled plane 50 miles back to Squantum, where he crash-landed a quarter-mile offshore when his engine failed.

He might have lost his life had it not been for the bravery of a hospital corpsman, Reservist J. L. Seppels of Weymouth, who dove into the icy water to rescue him when the almost frozen pilot lacked strength to grasp a lifeline.

MacIntyre suffered minor bruises in his parachute landing but commandeered a canoe belonging to civilians who helped him and paddled into the harbor in an effort to rescue Colgate.

The canoe capsized, however, as MacIntyre and Allison F. Rich of North Eastham neared the dye marker which stained the water at the point where Colgate landed a half mile offshore.

The two men righted the canoe and got back to shore.

Colgate's body was recovered by Coast Guardsmen.

Flares Bring Hope For Missing B-29

London, Jan. 30 (AP).—Flares spotted by a British steamer north of the Canary Islands brought new hope today for the safety of 15 American airmen aboard a B-29 missing in the Atlantic since Thursday.

United States Third Air Division headquarters in London said the ship Godfrey B. Holt reported by wireless it sighted Very signal lights approximately 50 miles north of Las Palmas in the Canary Islands late last night.

The huge bomber disappeared during a training flight from Dakar, French West Africa, to an American Air Force base at Marham, England.

The Air Force headquarters assumed the Godfrey B. Holt proceeded to search the area.

Meanwhile, rescue planes also were flying over the area. Two United States destroyers, the Gyatt and the Ellyson, are due in the area.

Postlude

Villa-Lobos Is at Best in Own Music

By Richard Keith

Heitor Villa-Lobos, distinguished Brazilian composer and conductor, led the National Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon at Constitution Hall in a program of music by Bach, Scriabin and himself.

In opening with his own transcription of Bach's "Dorian" Toccata and Fugue, he made a respectful bow to the man whom he venerates and emulates in his own compositions. Unfortunately, this work, particularly the Toccata, does not lend itself well to orchestral treatment. It contains much elaborate figuration in the bass line which the lower strings are simply unable to cope with successfully.

After the Bach piece, 50 minutes were spent performing an early work by Scriabin, the Second Symphony. Unlike his later and historically significant compositions, this one is just an untidy dish of warmed-over Nineteenth Century styles. Its principal ingredient is Wagner, but there are generous amounts of Liszt, Franck, Tschaikowsky, and Mendelssohn in the sauce. The orchestra deserves praise for getting over this musical obstacle course so expertly.

The last half of the program was devoted to two works composed by the conductor. In both of them, Villa-Lobos shows he is one of this century's most versatile and imaginative composers. He is a veritable wizard when it comes to brilliant effects and startling orchestration. His melodic ideas are always fresh, his rhythmic sense always dynamic, and his way of expressing himself always lucid.

In "Uirapuru," Villa-Lobos has indulged in the age-old game of imitating the sounds of nature musically. The whole work abounds in jungle sounds—toad calls, bat calls, cricket calls and so forth. The Chorus No. 6 is an elaborate and somewhat long-winded synthesis of Brazilian popular music.

The orchestra did a splendid job of playing this difficult and intricate music.

Bernard Greenhouse, 'cellist, accompanied by Paul Ulanowsky, gave a recital last evening at the National Gallery which was wellnigh perfect. Mr. Greenhouse's playing is truly elegant, his musical sense refined yet not lacking in feeling, and his technique agile.

The program included works by Beethoven, Valentini, Benjamin, Ravel, Hindemith, Tschaikowsky and Faure.

Ulanowsky's accompaniments, as usual, were of the highest order.

Chinese Ship Victims' Relatives Wreck Office

Shanghai, China, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Hundreds of angry relatives of victim wrecked offices of the operators of one of the two vessels which collided and sank off the China coast Thursday night with an estimated loss of 700 lives, it was announced today.

They clamored in vain at the offices of the Chung Lien Steamship Co. for an explanation of why the crew of the 2400-ton ship, Taiping, allegedly launched no lifeboats after the crash.

said the private plane gashed a huge hole in the top of the liner in the crash, spilling its motor and two bodies into the big plane.

The passenger, Bruce Skinner, a Pan American public relations man, said "the collision came without any warning—there was a terrific bang. Our aircraft seemed to buckle and made a shallow dive, but the pilot quickly recovered."

The Pan American ship, the "Monarch of the Skies," had taken off from La Guardia Field bound for London about 10 minutes before the collision.

Skinner said passengers in the liner "were dazed and shaken by the impact" of the crash.

Skinner said the cabin of the liner, a Constellation, was "torn up by the impact and the whole top of the aircraft, for 15 feet behind the galley, was torn open. There were also two small holes torn into the side of the plane.

Smashes Into Cabin

"The whole of the other plane," Skinner said, "smashed into the cabin, including its engine and two bodies. I believe they were men. The bodies and the small plane's engine remained in the Constellation while the captain circled and made a perfect landing."

Skinner said the planes collided at about 3500 feet.

Pan American said they collided over Beacon Hill, a section of Port Washington.

Helicopter With Pulsejets On Its Rotors Is Tested

Manhattan Beach, Calif., Jan. 30 (AP).—A helicopter which its makers claim is the first to use buzz-bomb type pulsejet engines is now making flight tests here.

Designed and built by the American Helicopter Co., it is called the XA-5 "Top Sergeant."

Two roaring little pulsejet engines mounted on the tips of its rotor blades give it power—and its name.

"We believe it can outshout the loudest top sergeant in the Army," President Corwin D. Denney said today. Denney designed the craft.

Denney said the "Top Sergeant" is revolutionary in the helicopter industry because it can be assembled, ready for flight, 30 minutes after its separate parts (fuselage, rotor and engines) are delivered to an operating area. It also claims a world record in that its engine can be overhauled in only 5 minutes by one mechanic.

In addition to a pilot, the "Sargeant" can carry a load of 685 pounds. Cruising range varies from 140 to 200 miles depending on load. It has a top speed of 75 miles per hour.

Denney said it is the first in a line of proposed military pulsejet helicopters, other designs to increase range and lifting capacities.

He added the "Sergeant" is not intended to compete with traditional-type helicopters for long range or endurance. It is intended to lift large payloads and carry them short distances.

rescue squad ambulance took the victims to the hospital at Riverdale, where Jones was still unconscious hours later.

Police said they were unable to learn the cause of the crash. Operators of the Queen's Chapel Airport on Queen's Chapel rd., Hyattsville, said the plane stopped there for gas and oil and took off again a few minutes before it crashed, about a mile from the airport. Nothing was said about trouble with the motor.

Hospital physicians said one of the victims apparently died instantly from severe head injuries, the other succumbed on the way to the hospital.

Memorial Services for Gandhi Attract More Than 700 Here

Anniversary of Death Is Observed by All Classes in India

By Margaret Parton

NYHT News Service

Allahabad, Jan. 30.—The first anniversary of the death of Mahatma Gandhi was observed today in India by peasants, untouchables, businessmen, politicians, and by Moti Lal, a young political worker who never saw Gandhi but who guides his life by the teachings of the Mahatma.

Hundreds and thousands of young workers like Moti Lal and other older ones not so much like Moti Lal, were up before dawn this morning organizng processions, decorating pictures of Gandhi with wreathes of marigolds, spinning, chanting Gandhi's favorite prayer (which preaches universality in all religions) and in general trying in every way to remind the forgetful, apathetic, hungry mass of India, of Gandhi's message of love, tolerance and self-respect.

While many of today's observances in cities, towns, villages and country fields in India were organized by various religious and patriotic groups, a large part of them were directed by the Indian National Congress Committee, that curious blend of Gandhi's idealism and Tammany Hall, which Gandhi directed for many years and which now controls India.

Day of Fasting

Moti Lal is, as he himself admits, a very small cog in the well oiled machine which in Congress. But it is men like Moti Lal, living on the flame of idealism which Gandhi gave them, almost unconscious of the machine, who represent the Congress to the people of the Bazaars of Allahabad and all the other bazaars in India from Kashmir to Madras.

Here in Allahabad, typical quiet city of northern India, the program which Moti Lal and his fellow congressmen organized today followed lines similar to those other cities throughout India. Here, as elsewhere, people were asked to fast during the day, to refrain from ordinary business and to pass the day in prayer and contemplation. Moti Lal fasted too.

Early in the morning "prabhat pheris" (prayerful processions) gathered in every ward of the city, and carrying pictures of Gandhi and waving the green, orange and white national flag, marched toward a central park in the city bazaar. On a kind of marble bandstand, three young men and two girls knelt in front of a microphone and in Hindu began to chant:

"Ragupati Raghava Raja Ram

"Redeemer of sinners husband of Sita

"Isvar and Allah, both are thy names

"Give wisdom to all."

Moti Lal is 29, he said, and he had caught Gandhian fever when he was a student at Allahabad University in 1942.

"That was the time of the civil disobedience campaign led by Gandhi," he said. "I joined Congress then, and since that time I have devoted my life to it."

Indian Ambassador Conducts Rites in Interior Auditorium

An impressive memorial service to Mahatma Gandhi, featured by prayers chanted and spoken by the Indian leader's personal physician, was held here yesterday on the first anniversary of Gandhi's assassination.

Conducted by Sir Benegal Rama Rau, Ambassador of India to the United States, the service was held at the Department of the Interior Auditorium and was attended by more than 700 persons, including ambassadors and other high-ranking Washington representatives of many nations.

Gandhi's physician, Dr. Sushila Nayar, was attended in the prayer service by 11 ladies of the Indian Embassy, attired in flowing saris of white, as a symbol of the simplicity which was one of the spiritual leader's characteristics.

Explaining that Mahatma Gandhi respected all true religions, she opened the service by chanting a Buddhist prayer, and, after two minutes of silence, sang verses from the Hindu scriptures. Then followed excerpts from the Mohammedan Koran, from the Bhagavad-Gita, supreme scripture of Hindu India, from scriptures of the Sikh sect, and from the Sermon on the Mount, Gandhi's favorite part of the Bible.

Dr. Nayar, who is in this country for postgraduate work at Johns Hopkins and Columbia Universities, said the United Nations is not respected in some places because the "big nations" have violated one of Gandhi's principles, that of "nonaccumulation" of great material possessions. Accumulation of material power has made "everyone want to be big," just as Gandhi insisted it always did, with individuals or with nations, she said.

Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, reviewed the high points of Gandhi's life, while Lady Rama Rau in a brief talk spoke of him as a great spiritual leader from the historical point of view, but a "man whom we loved" to "the humble Indians."

Nehru Says India Will Guard Freedom

New Delhi, India, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru said today India will guard its freedom "at all costs and with all our strength."

Nehru said in a radio address that the teachings of Gandhi were needed in "this distracted, disintegrating world" because "we cannot ignore moral values except at our own peril."

D. C. Hospitals Approved by Surgical Body

All District hospitals of 25 beds and over have been fully approved by the American College of Surgeons for the year 1948, following the college's annual survey, finished in December.

Approval by the American College of Surgeons, which represents some 15,800 surgeons in the United States, Canada and Latin American countries, indicates that the hospitals "have complied satisfactorily with the fundamental requirements that assure the best care of the sick and injured," according to Dr. Malcolm T. MacEachern, associate director.

Dr. MacEachern said that 3150 of the 3947 hospitals surveyed in 1948 were approved. Of these, 2820 are fully approved and 330 provisionally. The latter are those which have accepted the requirements and are endeavoring to put them into effect.

Dr. MacEachern cited the fact that the average stay of a hospital patient has dropped from 18 to 20 days a few years ago to 8 to 10 days now. There has been a reduction in the hospital death rate from 6 to 8 per cent to 3 or 4 per cent. These facts are evidence of progress in organization, control and efficiency, Dr. MacEachern said.

The fundamental factors on which hospitals are rated by the College of Surgeons include physical plant, organization, governing board, administrator, personnel, medical staff, diagnostic and therapeutic facilities, medical records, staff conferences and humanitarian spirit in the care of the patient.

4 Resignations Are Accepted

sonal qualities of the four administrative officers have been involved in the consideration of the problem by the board. The board is grateful to all of them for their service under difficult conditions.

"It should be made clear that these four men had been acting ex officio as an administrative council, and that their differences arose at that level rather than in their separate functions. . . .

"In each of the four cases the board deeply regrets that the resignations from their administrative posts is indicated. The board wishes to make it abundantly clear that we have no reservations whatsoever about the character, integrity or loyalty of these individuals.

"The action taken is simply a resolution of an administrative impasse until a new administrative team can be assembled."

The board appointed Jacob Klein, faculty member now on leave, to the post of acting dean.

The board in its two-day inquiry talked to several faculty members and three students. It also had before it a statement from the student polity (council) reportedly prepared at the request of the governors.

This statement said in part:

The students "have come to feel that the state of the college must now be understood as one of genuine crisis; it is of more than administrative significance, and reflects a considerable period of discontent."

Legislation Mill Starts Today

sion to the House next week.

In the sharpest controversy so far, legislation to provide funds for the armed services will be subjected to closed House Armed Services Subcommittee hearings beginning today, with Defense Secretary Forrestal leading a parade of witnesses from the Army, Navy and Air Force.

This committee will have to tackle the financing phase of the revived issue over the strength of the Air Force—whether it is to be the 70-group service it wants to be or the 48-group organization budgeted by President Truman. Support for the 70-group objective is being piled up by Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.), who has enlisted some House leaders behind a proposal to switch to the Air Force 800 million dollars requested by President Truman for universal military training.

Both Labor Committees will be conducting hearings today, but the House group appeared to have the less difficult task, with its hearings based on legislation to increase the minimum-wage level above the current 40-cents-an-hour floor.

The Senate Labor Committee plunges today into a series of hearings on the far more controversial Administration proposal for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and reinstatement of the Wagner Labor Relations Act with some changes. Chairman Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah) has set February 10 as the deadline for completion of hearings on this proposal.

Student House Sponsors Series of 12 Lectures

The International Student House, 1825 R st. nw., will sponsor a series of 12 lectures on "Man's Search for Truth" by 12 noted philosophers and men of letters beginning Thursday.

"The Nature of Truth" will be discussed this Thursday by F. S. C. Northrup, sterling professor of philosophy and law at Yale University and author of "The Meeting of East and West."

IT'S GOOD TO HAVE AN EXTENSION TELEPHONE

With a telephone in your bedroom, you don't have to get up to answer it in the middle of the night. If you're ill, you can make or receive calls without getting out of bed.

The busy housewife can appreciate the convenience of an extension telephone, too. It means she can answer the telephone without having to run downstairs each time it rings. It may prevent her from missing calls she wouldn't want to miss and it's comforting to know that if an emergency should arise, the telephone is always near at hand.

You can have an extension telephone in your home for only a few cents per day. To order one, all you have to do is call our Business Office.

To those families who are waiting for telephone service: We're busy building and installing the complex central office equipment and other facilities needed to fill your orders. There is no shortage of telephone instruments.

West Facing More Storms

the Missouri River to the highest January level ever recorded, 17.1 feet.

In the Kansas City district, which normally gets 23 inches of snow during an entire winter, the January snowfall had amounted to more than 20 inches. New records were certain.

Normal January snowfall for Denver is less than six inches. So far this year more than 24 inches of snow has fallen.

For the past 70 years Denver's January temperature has averaged 30.8 degrees, but the January 1949 average stood at 17.7, more than 13 degrees below normal.

In Montana, forecasters told of a record snowfall during January, with more coming. Full statistics had not yet been compiled, but forecaster Ralph Gumps said in 25 years he could never remember so much snow on the ground for so long—86 inches on the Idaho border, 48 inches in Glacier Park, 13 inches in Lewiston, and 10 inches in the capital at Helena.

In Billings, where a five-inch January snowfall is normal, five times that much fell during the first month of this year and more was coming.

For the first time in many years the Army was blasting in the Yellowstone River in an attempt to avert spring floods.

In Burley, Idaho, in the center of the southern section of the State, a low of 30 degrees below zero was reported. The average of previous January lows was 15 degrees above, Forecaster H. A. Downs said. The same town had been covered by 23 inches of snow this month, compared with a normal of 10 inches.

Stravell, Idaho, came up for air after 35 inches of snow this month. Normally the town looks for 10 inches.

In Seattle, Wash., temperatures for January were at least 7 degrees below normal, the coldest in at least two decades.

For the first time in 20 years, there was a serious power shortage in the State, where hydroelectric power has been produced in plenty generally. Lack of rain last fall coupled with the big freeze caused the shortage.

Electric clocks had slowed down throughout the area, when the utilities were unable to maintain the normal frequency of 60 cycles.

Utah Average Doubled

In Utah which annually expects a little more than 10 inches of snow, well over 20 inches had fallen during January. In Salt Lake City, Forecaster A. B. Carpenter told of 30 inches which had fallen there this month, against a 65-year average of 12.4 inches. Below zero temperature in Salt Lake had been recorded on 14 days in January. Normally the mercury falls below zero only five times during the entire year.

On the 25th, Salt Lake shivered under the lowest January temperature ever recorded there, 22 degrees below zero.

Enterprise, Utah, was isolated from all forms of communication for four days, during the month.

The creeks which feed Salt Lake itself had frozen where they joined the lake for the first time in memory of weathermen.

The Governor has been informed that a potential flood condition exists in Utah. Virtually all of the 23 States surveyed were praying for slow thaws which would allow the record accumulations of snow to run off gradually.

Chinook Winds Feared

In States which bordered the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains, the warm chinook winds, which can produce sudden thaws, were especially feared.

Many of the Utah highways were for the first time limited to one-way traffic in one direction in the morning and the opposite direction during the afternoon. Roads to the much-advertised ski centers were blocked, and will stay blocked until cattle access roads had been cleared.

In Nevada, record temperatures were already noted in at least two communities, Winnemucca with 25 below and Lovelock with 38 below. Weathermen agreed that final accounting would reveal many new records.

Even "sunny" California has been hard hit.

A continual smog obscures visibility in the rich valleys near Los Angeles because of the smudge pots constantly burning in the citrus groves and truck farms to ward off frost. Los Angeles reported that on the 4th of January, the thermometer hit an all-time low of 27.9 degrees.

In northern Arizona, record snowfalls had necessitated airlift operations to save stranded livestock and to bring food to the isolated Navajo Indians.

The freak winter moved almost to the Mexican border yesterday and all States on the Gulf of Mexico reported either snow or sleet.

The lower Rio Grande valley in Texas was hard hit. Temperatures of 26 degrees had covered many of the area's 12 million orange and grapefruit trees with ice. Officials guessed that 25,000 acres of tomatoes had been wiped out by the freak weather.

"It's nobody's business but my own..."

When you see the Company's square mile of factories, its sales offices all over the map... it's hard to believe that the Old Man began with a backyard machine shop, a little borrowed money and a lot of nerve.

No doubt about it, at the start he stretched his credit skin-tight, often gambled on late mail trains to make his checks good...but in his day credit ratings usually came from banks, and bankers still used their own judgment.

"PERSONNEL" was a foreign word, and employee welfare plain common sense—not the name of a department! The Old Man's first workers were men he knew... and they sponsored the later ones. Management was a personal matter.

A workman himself, the Old Man knew when to overlook a hangover or an offday due to family trouble... but he fired and gave raises without asking leave of lawyers or grievance committees. And kept somebody sick or injured on the payroll—with workmen's compensation, union contracts, and group insurance no part of the deal.

In later years, when he gave everybody a week off with pay in summer and another at Christmas ...the help thought he was Santa Claus!

IF the inventory got uncomfortable, there was no FTC or Robinson-Patman Act to discourage an extra discount for a fast order.

"Merchandising" hadn't been minted... but the Old Man was always smart in giving the trade something new before sales started slipping... And a product change, or even a new line, didn't necessitate shutting down or expensive tooling.

Late in 1906, the industry thought the Old Man was slipping fast when he signed a big cut throat contract below cost... Then the 1907 Panic hit! He cut wages fifty cents a day, broke even on his contract—and his was the only factory in town that kept people working that terrible year!

FOR years, the Company's whole office force was three people and, of course, Mr. MacGillever, the bookkeeper.

Taxes meant taking the town assessor to lunch once a year to argue the valuation of plant and property...Payrolls were all cash, no checks, no "deducts," no series of separate accounts and records...Inventories, progress reports, time cost analyses—the Old Man took a walk through the place and found out for himself!

The few stockholders got such fat dividends in the good years, they didn't dare complain in the bad... Sales, net worth, profits, were privy only to MacGillever and the Old Man. If anybody was ill-advised enough to ask him about such matters, he answered curtly that it was nobody's business but his own!

THE Old Man's grandson, one of the Company vice presidents today, thinks his grandfather used to have it pretty soft!

Because today, nobody's business is his own... but open to government, unions, credit associations and others... run with legislated restraints and interminable reports ... and subject to changing conditions and complexities grandfather never imagined.

So today, for business men Nation's Business takes on more meaning and value than any other business publication currently issued.

Nation's Business is not primarily a medium of news or vehicle of current information... no compendium of markets, no compilation of prices, no how-to manual. It concentrates principally on 1) Interpretation and 2) Significance.

It is not much concerned with what has just happened—but why...and more concerned with the major influences that will determine or affect what happens next year.

It likes the long view, in time to afford a long look... tries to chart a course rather than throw out a life raft. Most of the topics troublesome to business at present were indicated and appraised in Nation's Business months ago. And the regular reader of Nation's Business rarely finds himself unaware of the trend or at a loss to explain the turn of events...can usually plan ahead rather than compromise afterwards.

DOING a job duplicated by no other business publication, Nation's Business today far exceeds any other business publication in circulation and influence among business men.

And with 650,000 circulation — all advance paid subscriptions — Nation's Business not only reaches the majority of the men making major decisions in business management, but affords the most comprehensive coverage among all classifications of business...And makes its majority market available to the advertiser at lowest cost!

Issued monthly, it doesn't crowd the reader... or pile up unread—vital factor for advertisers to the business market today!

Mikan's Record 48 Points Help Beat Caps, 84-79

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

REDSKIN TEAMS WERE never so pleased, or pleasing, as when Ray Flaherty was coaching 'em, 1937-42. He was a bulwark against front-office interference, and they were happy athletes who went on to win three Eastern Division titles and two league championships from the Bears in his six years in Washington.

There were no stockholders among the coaches during Flaherty's regime with the Redskins. Flaherty's cold stare discouraged too-frequent excursions into the dressing room. He valued business-office men as strategists chiefly in the matter of selling season tickets.

POVICH

It was the Redskins' finest era in Washington. Everybody knew who was coaching the team. There was no direct phone connections from the royal box to the players' bench. The town was daft about its Redskins, Baugh, Edwards, Farkas, Barber, Milner, Malone, Smith, Pinckert and Justice, Irwin, Krause and McChesney.

FLAHERTY WAS a one-man coaching staff who never saw the need for a battery of high-powered assistants, in the modern manner. He delegated some authority to the club's trainer, Johnny Baker, but that fellow was mostly occupied with taping and rubbing. When he told his ends what he wanted on either offense or defense, he was asking nothing from them he couldn't do himself when he was an all-league end with the Giants.

To his football players, he talked tough but they didn't seem to mind that and there was always the suspicion, anyway, that he could lick 'em all, one at a time, or in small gangs. He didn't temporize with lazy performances, and detested the loafers.

The night of the Redskins' first game in Washington in 1937, Flaherty made himself clear to the Redskins squad. "You're in a new town," he said, "we've got to make good for the fans. And for the club, too. We're paying you for only 60 minutes of football a week, and I wnat 60 good minutes." The Redskins went out and beat the Giants.

THAT WAS the night, too, in the dressing room, when Flaherty said he wouldn't accept any excuses if the Redskins blew the ball game. "Up in Boston you complained all last season that we didn't have a passer. We didn't, then, but now we've gone out and hired Sammy Baugh, the best damn passer in the world, for you.

"I want you to give Sammy protection every minute. The man who misses a block and lets him get hurt is going to be fined. I don't have to tell you the Giants will be out to get Sammy out of there in a hurry. We don't want that to happen. Get them first." Flaherty always made clear his own view of pro football: it was a wonderful game and a rough business.

He broke into pro football the hard way, himself, as a $30-a-game man on Red Grange's barnstorming team under the aegis of Cash-and-Carry Pyle. In the off-season he got a job as a supernumary with Pyle's famed coast-to-coast Bunion Derby, and was beginning to wonder where his college education from Gonzaga was taking him, until he found steady work as an end for the New York Giants.

IT WAS a surprise to Flaherty when his job as coach of the Redskins ended permanently in 1942. He went into the Navy on what he thought was a leave-of-absence, only to learn that Dutch Bergman was given a long-term contract as his successor with the Redskins. But Dan Topping picked him to coach the New York Yankees of the All-America Conference.

He was with the richest team in pro football in the biggest city in the league, but he wasn't above taping ankles before a game. He'd devote 15 minutes to Spec Sanders' ankles, and a curious football writer asked him how come a head coach was doing that menial job . . . "It's important," said Flaherty, "and, anyway, I can tape an ankle better than anybody I know." It was the lone manifestation of any lack of modesty.

With the Yankees Flaherty did well enough. He took the club to two Eastern titles in his first two seasons. Topping fired him when he got off to a bad start last year, after Topping had given away too many of Flaherty's good ball players in an effort to distribute some strength around the league.

Like his first pro mentor, Steve Owen, Flaherty's chief passion was a good line. He writhed when Topping sent his good guard, Dick Barwegen, to Baltimore. Before last season's game with the Colts, Flaherty was asked how his team stacked up. "We ought to score four touchdowns," he said, "but our defense is ragged and that may not be enough." He called it. The Yankees took a 42-28 licking.

Thirteen Games on Tap

Conference Teams Seeking Tourney Berths This Week

The question of who goes to the Southern Conference three-day dribble derby at Durham, N. C., in March is due for considerable attention this week.

Only two things were really certain about the eight-team tournament yesterday.

1. North Carolina State's "Hoosier Hotshots," leading the 16-club league with seven wins and no losses, were a cinch—barring some major catastrophe—to be in the fireworks March 3, 4 and 5.

2. And The Citadel Bulldogs, buried in the cellar without a circuit triumph in six tests, can't make the tourney.

In addition to State, three other quintets are expected to have little trouble gaining a spot in the classic. These teams are North Carolina's Tar Heels (7-3), William and Mary's Indians (4-2) and George Washington's Colonials (6-3).

The remaining four tournament berths are wide open. South Carolina (3-1), Furman (3-2), Davidson (4-3), Duke (4-3) and University of Richmond (4-3) all have good chances.

Thirteen loop tilts dot this week's heavy schedule.

North Carolina State had to hustle Saturday night before the pack could defeat George Washington, 60-59. The league's defending champions had to fight off a furious rally on the part of the Colonials during the closing seconds.

Duke's Blue Devils kept their tourney hopes alive by beating Davidson's Wildcats, 57-51; the University of Richmond upset Virginia Tech, 51-48; North Carolina spanked Furman, 61-44.

Nonconference results include Miami (Fla.) University's 58-48 conquest of Maryland; Roanoke College's second win over Virginia Military Institute, 48-37. And the Citadel finally won its first game after failing in nine previous encounters, beating Presbyterian.

New Ruling Saves Wake Forest 3 Games 'Lost'

Gerry F. Eppley, president of the Southern Conference, said last night that Wake Forest will not have to forfeit three basketball games in which an ineligible player was used unless and until the conference basketball committee rules otherwise.

Eppley said a league ruling requiring forfeiture where inelegible students play does not go into effect until September 1, 1949.

Wake Forest officials apparently considered the games forfeited after they ruled that Willard Kaylor, guard, had played in seven while ineligible. The Deacons won three of the seven. Eppley said the basketball committee is to meet the end of February.

He said the forfeiture rule was made last month. He previously said the rule provided "that any member using an ineligible player would automatically forfeit all games in which the ineligible player appeared."

Ben Hogan, Demaret Tie At 278; They Play Today

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 30 (AP).—Veteran Ben Hogan and Jimmy Demaret tied for first place in the $10,000 Phoenix Open Golf Tournament today. Both had 72-hole scores of 278, 6 under par.

Hogan dropped a 4-foot putt for a birdie 4 on the 540-yard eighteenth hole to go into the tie. He finished the round with a score of 74. Demaret had missed a chance to win undisputed first place when a 2-foot putt missed by a fraction of an inch on the final hole.

Hogan and Demaret will meet in an 18-hole playoff tomorrow.

Today's finale was almost a repeat performance of last week's Long Beach Open, in which the two shared the lead with scores of 272. Hogan, of Hershey, Pa., won the 18-hole playoff from the Ojai, Calif., player, 67 to 69.

6000 See Battle

Approximately 6000 golf fans tried to get a glimpse of Hogan as he came down for the final hole on the 6578-yard Phoenix Country Club Course.

Deadlocked at 280 were Dr. Cary Middlecoff, Memphis, Tenn.; Sam Snead, and John Palmer, Badin, N. C.

Dr. Middlecoff had a final round score of 73, Snead a 71 and Palmer turned in the only subpar round among the five leaders when he shot a 68. On the 12th hole Middlecoff touched the ball with his putter, costing him a stroke.

Alone at 281 was Marty Furgol, Albuquerque, N. Mex. He had a 74 today.

Clayton Heafner, Charlotte, N. C., finished with a 69 for a 282 total. Also at 282 was Bob Hamilton, Landover, Md., who had a final 68.

Hogan went into the last round leading with a 204. Demaret's 205 was second. Hogan and Demaret were even at 242 as Hogan, playing with the last threesome on the course, made the turn. In his group, Middlecoff turned at 243. The rest of the field was out of the play at that point. On the twelfth hole, Demaret picked up two strokes with a birdie three as the other pair went one over par. All were one over par on the thirteenth.

All three players pared the tenth and eleventh.

Middlecoff and Demaret had birdies on the fourteenth with Hogan holing a par four. On the short fifteenth, all had par threes.

Demaret Misses Shot

Demaret went one over par on the sixteenth and eighteenth and had a regulation four on the seventeenth. Hogan had two pars and the birdie. Middlecoff went one over on the seventeenth with pars on the sixteenth and eighteenth.

Again on the eighteenth Middlecoff missed a chance to be all alone in third place when an 8-foot putt failed to drop.

The 278 was the highest 72-hole winning total here since 1935. Last year, Bobby Locke, Johannesburg, South Africa, had a record 268. The year before Hogan won his second consecutive Phoenix Open title. His 1947 total was 270.

Low amateurs were Frank Stranahan, Toledo, Ohio, and Doug Ford, Larchmont, N. Y. They finished today's play with par 71's and totals of 288.

The leaders:

But Is Too Busy to Defend

Gehrmann Claims Dodds' Title After Millrose Win

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—Wisconsin's Don Gehrmann won't be defending his newly won title as king of the indoor milers any more this season but it will be a long time before 15,000 fans forget his blazing finish in the Millrose games at Madison Square Garden last night.

Gehrmann laid claim to Gil Dodds' vacated title by outrunning a field that included two crack European Olympians and winning the Wanamaker Mile with a stirring stretch wallop in 4:09.5.

Unfortunately for the promoters the 20-year-old Wisconsin junior probably won't be available for the rest of the major Eastern indoor meets. His varsity commitments in the Western Conference are expected to keep him tied up the remainder of the season.

But his first New York appearance was a thriller. After yielding the lead to Willy Slykhuis of Holland on the eighth of the 11 laps on the Garden's brand-new wooden saucer, Gehrmann came through with a kick that sent him roaring past the Dutch Olympian just short of the tape.

Slykhuis also was timed in 4:09.5. They were that close. John Twomey of the Illinois Athletic Club finished third, 10 yards back. Ingvar Bengtsson of Sweden, troubled with a toothache, was last in the six-man field, his first defeat in three American starts.

Brilliant as it was, Gehrmann's feat was not the most outstanding performance of the night, in the eyes of a committee of sports writers. That group named Gaston Reiff of Belgium as winner of the Rodman Wanamaker Trophy, given annually to the best athlete in the Millrose Games.

Reiff, Olympic 5000-meter champion made his American debut by capturing the 2-mile run in 8:56.1, fastest time made on a board track since Greg Rice, the indoor record holder, hung up his spikes six years ago.

TRAINING FOR LOUIS?—Not hardly. Heavyweight Lee Savold, bedecked in hunting pink and high hat, is simply enjoying a day in England following the hounds, you know. He's having a jolly old time between exhibition bouts in London, expects to return to U. S. soon and again request a match with Joe Louis this summer

Dot Kirby Rallies, Wins Women's Golf

Miami, Fla., Jan. 30 (AP).—Dorothy Kirby of Atlanta, Ga., called on her fighting heart today to win the seventeenth annual Helen Lee Doherty Women's Amateur Golf Tournament in a tense 36-hole match with Marjorie Lindsay of Decatur, Ill.

Miss Kirby, who twice before had gone to the finals in this most important winter tournament for amateurs, took a big early lead and lost it and apparently was out of it when she rallied to win, 1 up.

The Atlanta miss won six straight holes on the outgoing nine this morning and made the turn in 37, one under women's par for the 6326-yard Miami Country Club course. Miss Lindsay, who halved the first hole with a par 5, carded seven more 5s on the opening nine and needed 43 strokes.

Miss Lindsay won three holes on the back nine while Miss Kirby was taking one and they finished the morning round with Kirby leading, 4 up. The Atlanta miss played the round in regulation 76 while Miss Lindsay posted an 80.

Dorothy picked up another hole to start the afternoon but the Decatur girl was not out of it. She won the twenty-second hole but lost the twenty-third and Miss Kirby was 5-up again.

Miss Kirby was tiring and Miss Lindsay put on a great stretch drive. She won the twenty-fourth and halved the next three to end the twenty-seventh four down.

The Decatur girl, who has been playing golf 13 years, won the next four holes and it looked like the Georgian was through. Miss Lindsay bagged a sensational birdie three on the 390-yard thirtieth when she chipped in from 70 feet away. On the next hole she canned an 8-foot putt to square the match.

Miss Kirby came back at that point. She just missed a 15-foot putt for a birdie while Miss Lindsay, anxious now, muffed a 6-footer and went one over par, giving Miss Kirby the lead.

They halved the next two and on the eighteenth, after Miss Kirby chipped to within 2 feet of the cup, Miss Lindsay missed a 5-footer that would have squared the match.

Walcott Picks Up Easy $5000

Aruba, Dutch West Indies, Jan. 30 (AP)—Jersey Joe Walcott, the veteran heavyweight contender from Camden, N. J., gave two opponents a going over with the 16-ounce gloves last night and picked up $5000 for the six exhibition rounds.

Jersey Joe, weighing 206, went three rounds each wth Omelio Agramonte, 192, and Baba Adams, 197, a couple of Caribbean heavies.

Agramonte, the first foe, waded into Jersey Joe at the start and it looked like a real fight for a while. Walcott cooled off Agramonte with a left to the jaw in the first round and the Latin behaved after that.

Adams and Walcott exchanged blows at long range for their first two rounds, but in the third Walcott landed a flurry of blows which had Adams holding on.

The crowd cheered Walcott for letting up on his opponents when he had them in trouble.

Ashburn May Sign Up Today

Philadelphia, Jan. 30 (AP).—A spokesman for the Philadelphia Phillies said today that Richie Ashburn is not a holdout.

The fleet-footed young outfielder was reported yesterday to be seeking a salary boost from the $5000 figure he received last year to $12,000 on the strength of a brilliant rookie season.

The spokesman said Ashburn will talk with Owner Bob Carpenter of the Phils tomorrow and added that Richie probably will sign at the time.

He wouldn't say for what salary, but it is likely to be somewhere between $7500 and $10,000.

The Phils' spokesman said the outfielder Del Ennis, also on the unsigned list, is expected to enter the fold somewhere during the week.

Earlier reports said the Phils offered homer-hitting Del a two-year pact with $14,500 per year and that Del asked $15,000. It's a good bet that Ennis will sign a one-year contract at "a figure well over $15,000."

Celtics Buy Zollners' Kinney

Boston, Jan. 30 (AP).—The Boston Celtics today announced the purchase of high-scoring Bob Kinney from the Fort Wayne Zollners of the Professional Basketball Association of America.

The Celtics said 27-year-old Kinney will report immediately and will play against the Rochester Royals Tuesday night at the Garden.

Kinney, who stands 6 feet 6 inches, and weighs 220 pounds, formerly played for Rice Institute. This is his third season in the professional ranks.

Ken Stribling, Smug Hursey Fight Tonight

Smuggy Hursey and Ken Stribling, who alternately hogged the spotlight at Turner's Arena the past two years, share it tonight when they clash in the featured 10-rounder.

The match is a culmination of a two-year effort by Matchmaker Gabe Menendez to bring the two local middleweights together and comes at a time when the contestants aren't what they used to be.

Stribling has been going backward since last summer when Jake LaMotta chopped him down in six rounds at Griffith Stadium. Hursey has been in a tailspin for 18 months, when Tommy Bell gave him an unmerciful 10-round cuffing.

They're both still young and ambitious. And they're both crowd-pleasers. Stribling is a sharper puncher, but Hursey is the busier fighter. Neither has ever been known to take a backward step and their match shapes up as a rousing brawl.

It's a do-or-die effort for them, locally anyway. The loser will be shunted to oblivion while the winner takes a long stride toward Griffith Stadium and the bigger summer purses.

The victor will probably be matched with either Joe Blackwood, the Boston butcher who has scored three straight victories here, or Johnny Hansbury, another of the seemingly never-ending supply of D. C. middleweights.

In supporting roles, Jackie Ford, highly promising District welter, tangles with Billy Caulfield of Baltimore; Puggy Lyons, local welter, faces Jimmy Briscoe; Lonnie (Bulldog) Rutherford, middleweight from Roanoke, meets Dick Barber; Walter Hamm, Washington feather, faces Irish Jackie O'Keefe, from Providence, R. I. All are five-rounders.

Loss Is 3rd in Row For Washington

Special to The Washington Post

Minneapolis, Jan. 30.—George Mikan set a new professional basketball scoring record tonight, tossing in 48 points to lead his Minneapolis Lakers to an 84-79 victory over the Washington Capitols.

With 9139, the largest crowd of the season on hand, Mikan dumped in 26 points in the first half and 22 after intermission to rub out the old BAA record of 47 points which he shared with Joe Fulks of Philadelphia and Carl Braun of New York.

Mikan, superb on rebounds, had 18 field goals, tying another record, and 12 free throws.

In tonight's scoring, George Mikan increased his total to 1030 points for 37 games, 14 more points than Fulks has scored in 40 games.

For Washington, it was its tenth licking against 30 defeats while the Lakers marked up their eighth straight win and 14 straight at home.

Third in Row for Caps

For the Caps, the defeat was their third in a row, the longest losing streak they have experienced in three years of league play. The Eastern Division leaders, however, still maintain a nine-game lead over second-place New York.

Mikan, 6-foot 10-inch former DePaul star, did most of his scoring against Kleggie Hermsen and Jack Nichols, Cap centers, but the last two-pointer he made, the one that broke the record, was made off Bones McKinney in the last minute of play.

The Minneapolis - Washington clash was tough and go from the opening tapoff to the game-ending gun. The Lakers jumped into an early 10-5 advantage on the strength of some dead-eye shooting by Mikan and Jim Pollard, but the Caps rallied sufficiently to make the first quarter turn on the long end of a 21-19 count.

The lead changed hands four times in the second period, but the Caps held on at the end and were in front, 41-40, at half time.

The Caps set the pace most of the first two periods on hot shooting by Jack Nichols, Fred Scolari and Bob Feerick.

But after Swede Carlson put the Lakers back into the lead at the start of the third period, the Caps never were ahead again.

Feerick, with his peculiar crooked-arm shot, totaled 19 points, Scolari, 17 and McKinney, 16.

Bruce Hale was the only thing Fort Wayne had to offer in the second half as Baltimore ran home with the tilt. Hale led scoring with 26 points.

Villanova, Hamline Carry On

By Murray Rose

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—The pace steps up all over the Nation for college basketballers this week and for Villanova, one of the country's two major unbeaten outfits, it will be a hectic grind.

Examinations out of the way, the collegians will settle down for the final five weeks in the stretch drive for conference championships and tournament bids.

Villanova ran up its twelfth victory by crushing Georgetown of Washington, D. C., last night, 64-49. Hamline (14-0), the other squad with a perfect record was idle. But Minnesota and Western Kentucky finally went the way all teams must go and bowed for the first time.

Minnesota (13-1) found Illinois' pressing game and a foreign court too much of a hurdle and went down before the Illini (13-1) at Champaign, 45-44. Western Kentucky (15-1) lost to Eastern Kentucky (12-3) in a thundering upset, 42-40. The contest was played at Western Kentucky and the Hilltoppers, who beat Eastern Kentucky earlier in the season, were heavy favorites.

Wildcats Hit the Road

Villanova opened a long road trip at Washington. The Wildcats, a surprise contender with an ace in Paul Arizen, play four tough teams away from home this week. They meet Duquesne (11-2) Monday, Chicago Loyola (14-3) Wednesday, Baldwin Wallace (9-4) Thursday, and Bowling Green (Ohio), (10-6) Saturday.

Hamline plays only once, meeting Concordia (Minn.) at home Saturday. The Pied Pipers will have things easy until they face the mighty Phillips Oilers February 17. In between, Hamline tackles St. Thomas (Minn.), Concordia again, Valparaiso and St. Olaf.

Western Kentucky's loss was one of the five big upsets of the day. There were others but the five were notable in that the favorites all lost on home courts.

Long Island U., on a Far West junket, whipped Oregon by [illegible] points for the second night in a row, 55-53. Idaho, walloped soundly by Washington State recently, turned the tables on the Cougars and thrashed them, 41-32. It was State's second loss in 20 games.

Brigham Young and Rutgers furnished the other surprises. B. Y. conked Utah, 56-55, and Rutgers handed Princeton its first defeat in Tigertown this season, 46-44.

Sock It to 'Em

Mexico City, Jan. 30 (AP).—Brazil's Vasco de Gama team won its sixth straight soccer match in Mexico by defeating the Vera Cruz Sharks, 2-1, before 40,000 today in Olympic Stadium.

Princeton, Virginia Play Hoyas, GW

An interesting week of college basketball begins tonight at the American University gym, reaches a high point with another big Armory double-header Wednesday and ends Saturday night when St. John's of Brooklyn pays Georgetown a visit.

Coaches and players of all high and prep schools in the local area have been invited by Coach Staff Cassell to watch his Eagles open the second half of their schedule against Bucknell tonight.

Bucknell's fortunes reached an ebb Saturday when it dropped its eighth straight game, 56-41, to Navy, after winning the first two games on its schedule.

Hoping that Saturday night's 6000-fan turnout was no accident, Georgetown and George Washington traipse into the Armory for the year's second big college double-header as paper-underdogs again.

Virginia and Princeton, gentlemen collegiates of the North and South, will provide the Armory opposition, probably more than enough.

George Washington's struggle will center on stopping Virginia's Center Joe Noertker, who has been engaged in a struggle of sorts himself. Noertker, averaging 22 points per game, has been struggling mightily with Yale's Tony Lavelli for the Nation's top collegiate scoring honors.

The Colonials are already numbered among the Cavaliers' nine victims this season, the result of a 67-53 shellacking administered last December 20 in Charlottesville. However, as North Carolina State found out last Saturday, you can't beat G. W. very easily on past performances.

Virginia dropped close ones to Duke and Navy, and suffered a clean upset at the hands of Washington and Lee.

In tackling Princeton, the Hoyas continue a sporadic series which dates all the way back to 1913. During the long span the Hoyas have won three of the five games played, but they'll have a rugged evening trying to make it four.

For the Tigers, current leaders in the Ivy League, have, in compiling a record of seven wins, four losses, knocked over such teams as Penn, Navy, Harvard and Lafayette, the last named having sunk the Hoyas, 56-48, two weeks ago.

On the same Wednesday, Maryland will be in Cincinnati, battling a Cincinnati outfit, which until a week ago, was one of the few major unbeaten quintets in the country.

Since then Cincinnati has lost games to Butler and West Virginia.

By week's end, the Terps' chances for a spot in the Southern Conference playoffs should be decided. Away games against VMI on Friday and Washington and Lee on Saturday must both be won by Maryland to keep it in the playoff picture.

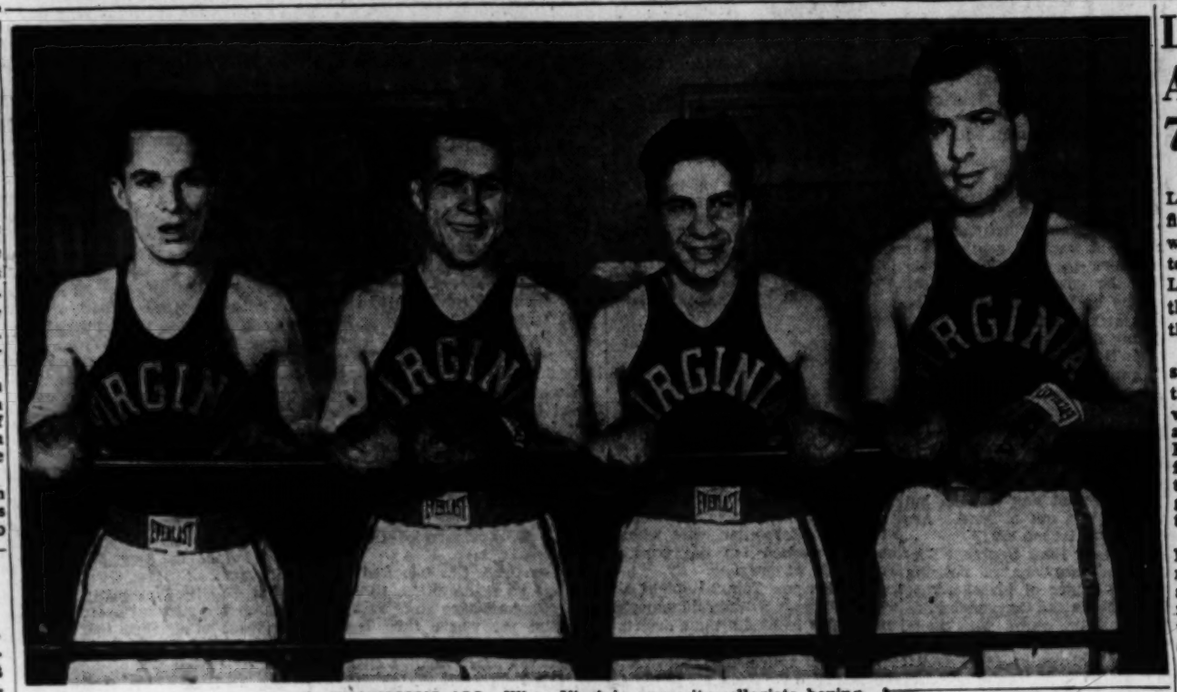
One of metropolitan New York's traditional powerhouses, St. John's University, hogs next Saturday's local court attention as it collides with Georgetown in a single game at the Armory.

George Washington keeps its hand in also Saturday, traveling up to Annapolis for a game with Navy.

Where to Purchase Tickets for Games

Tickets for the Armory double-header Wednesday night featuring Georgetown against Princeton and George Washington against Virginia can be obtained at the following places:

Georgetown Athletic Office, Lisner Auditorium at 21st and H sts. nw.; Fairway Sports Shop, 1328 G st. nw., and at the National Guard Armory on the evening of the games.



CHAMPIONS ALL—When Virginia opens its collegiate boxing season tonight against South Carolina, the Cavaliers will have four Eastern intercollegiate champions in their line-up. They are, left to right: Allen Hollingsworth, 125 pounds; Grover Masterson, 135 pounds; Basil Miragliotta, 145 pounds, and Joe Miragliotta, 155 pounds. The Carolinians defeated Tennessee Tech in their opener last week

Loyola Climbs In Loop Play

There was little doing in Mason-Dixon basketball circles last week, and Loyola did most of that. In one of two conference games played, the Greyhounds edged closer to the league-leading Tigers of Hampden-Sydney by knocking off Washington College.

The (85-62) victory Saturday was the fifth in a row for Lefty Reitz' high-geared outfit and left it two games off the pace set by Hampden-Sydney, winner of seven straight.

In the other conference contest Western Maryland moved from twelfth place to eleventh by stepping on Gallaudet (61-45).

It marked the ninth game without a victory for Gallaudet and the second win in eight starts for the Golden Terrors.

Mason-Dixon competitors fared well against outside opponents, winning two of three struggles. Towson licked Frostburg (Md.) Teachers (56-47) and Roanoke conquered Virginia Military (48-37). The loser was Baltimore U., which dropped before Lebanon Valley (65-60).

With mid-term examinations out of the way, the courtmen step up the tempo this week. Six conference games are scheduled, and Loyola plays two of them.

The defending champion meets Western Maryland Wednesday night and Johns Hopkins Saturday night and is favored to whip both.

Hampden-Sydney will not play any league opponents this week.

Joe Lane booted the only goal of the match yesterday for Locust Point to eliminate the Washington and Suburban Soccer League's Martin Bakery from the second round of Stewart Cup play.

Parkville, also of Baltimore, knocked Charles County out of the Cup matches with a 2-0 victory.

In regular league matches, Sugar Radio stomped on Indianhead, 15-1; Glasva defeated Columbia, 1-0; Pan-American beat Rockville, 3-1; and OSIA shut out Washington-French, 6-0.

Behind Giermak, and with a better average, was Joe Noertker, Virginia center, who had 264 points for 12 tilts. Ed McMillan, William and Mary guard, was the only other player to break the 200-mark. McMillan had 209.

New Nebraska Coach Ready To Tackle Job

Durham, N. H., Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Newly appointed Nebraska football coach James W. (Biff) Glassford, a high flying gridiron mentor in New England small college competition, could hardly wait today to try his wings in the rougher air of the Big Six.

"It's a wonderful opportunity," said the 35-year-old coach as he prepared to leave the University of New Hampshire after three years, where his teams won the Yankee Conference title in each of his three years.

He was eager to take a crack at leading Nebraska's Cornhuskers out of the football wilderness at $10,000 a year.

Glassford, All-America guard and captain of the University of Pittsburgh team that won the 1937 Rose Bowl game, said he wasn't worried by the fact he was the third coach at Nebraska in three years. He succeeds George (Potsy) Clark, now thletic director there.

Police Thwart Hotel Holdup During Routine Check for Missing Girls

McMillen, 24, a laborer, of 1411 K st. se. was charged with two counts of robbery and one of unauthorized use of an auto.

All three will be arraigned in Municipal Court today.

It was pure chance that took Sergt. Frank R. Barnard and Pvts. Thomas H. Carpenter and Albert F. Mode, all attached to the First Precinct, into the Alton Hotel at 1007 E st. nw. in the midst of the holdup at 3 a. m. yesterday, the policemen explained. They gave this account of the whole thing:

The three policemen had met the parents of two missing Arlington girls, aged 13 and 16 years, to visit a downtown hotel on information the girls might be there. They did not find the girls.

Private Carpenter then remembered he had seen a girl, answering the description of the 16-year-old, at the Alton Hotel, just around the corner, so the group went there.

Sergeant Barnard and the mother of one of the girls started up the stairs to the second floor, location of the clerk's desk, with Private Mode right behind them. When they got halfway up the stairs, a man, later identified as Young, hurried down past them.

The clerk, catching sight of the policemen coming up the stairs, yelled, "Stop that man. I'm being held up."

Private Mode turned around and started down the stairs, just as Private Carpenter came in the door. They caught Young between them.

Sergeant Barnard continued up the stairs to the second floor, where he saw the clerk, Croft, standing by the desk and another man, later identified as Sweet, standing directly behind him.

"Don't let this man get away. He's got a gun!" Croft shouted.

At that instant, Sweet drew a .32 caliber automatic from his right coat pocket and pointed it at Sergeant Barnard. He was no more than an arm's length from the sergeant as he declared:

"I don't want any trouble, but I want to get out of here. Are you going to let me out?"

Stalling for time, Sergeant Barnard didn't answer, but noticing from the corner of his eye, that Privates Mode and Carpenter were coming up the stairs with their prisoner, he warned them:

"Stay where you are, this man's got a gun. Don't come up any further, he's got me covered."

The policemen kept on coming, followed by a fourth policeman, Pvt. Adam P. Scheri, also of the First Precinct, who had seen the scout car in front of the hotel while patroling his beat on foot and had decided to investigate.

At this point, Sweet caught sight of Private Carpenter, with whom he had worked for the Capital Transit Co. at one time.

"Oh, it's you Tom. I might as well give up," Sweet said quietly and meekly handed his gun over to Sergeant Barnard.

When the policemen took Sweet and Young to the scout car in front of the hotel, McMillen pulled up in the get-away car, took one look at the policemen and drove off immediately to Sweet's home, where he told Sweet's wife what had happened.

She came to police headquarters to find her husband and told police that McMillen was at her home. They arrested him there a short while later.

Croft told police the two men came in, pulled the gun on him and robbed him of $48 in cash. In order to stall for time, he then told them a soldier, who had several hundred dollars with him, was sleeping in a room nearby. The men went into the room and robbed Adron Tidwell, stationed at Andrews Field, of $15 in cash.

The mother of the 16-year-old girl, who witnessed the whole thing, later declared that she had never seen a "neater job of sheer nerve" than that displayed by Sergeant Barnard.

(The mother's name is withheld to protect her juvenile daughter.)

It was not until police had questioned the three young men that they learned of earlier exploits. The trio admitted that shortly after midnight, they took a car from in front of 744 9th st. se., starting it by crossing the wires. Police identified the owner of the car as Charles W. Robinson of the 9th st. address.

At the time, the trio had the gun, but no ammunition, so they went to a hardware store at 3917 S. Captol st., where they broke through the transom. Just as it happened at the Alton Hotel, a chance visit, this time by H. Ralph Pearson, co-owner of the store, and a former park policeman, interrupted them. Pearson tells this story:

The store had been closed at 9 p. m., but he decided to return shortly before 2 a. m. because his car needed alcohol. He entered through the rear door and heard a noise up front. He walked up toward the front. As he neared the door, one of the men jumped up from behind a table and pointed a gun at him.

Pearson, with his police experience, calmly told the man:

"Get out of here before you get into trouble."

"You're the one who's in trouble," the gunman replied and forced Pearson to unlock the front door and go outside. There, another of the men started to hit Pearson with a blackjack but changed his mind and they all went back into the store. There they searched Pearson, robbed him of the one dollar he had in his billfold, and made him open the cash register drawer, which was empty.

"We've put all our money in the night deposit and there isn't any in the store," he told them.

Then they took five boxes of .32 and .38-caliber ammunition from a shelf next to the cash register, warned Pearson not "to do anything wise," ran out to the car and drove away. Pearson got the license number as they fled and called police.

Police said the three men gave no reason for starting out on the crime spree other than that they had decided on it during the evening while sitting around talking. Pearson said, however, that they told him they were ex-servicemen, who were "tired of getting the rough end of things."

The two girls, whose disappearance was actually responsible for the sudden halt of the trio's activities, were still missing last night.

Laurel Police Hold Man in Attack

Laurel (Md.) police yesterday charged a 26-year-old laborer with the attempted rape of a 39-year-old widow near her home in Laurel Friday.

Walter Garfield Tillghman, of Beacontown, near Laurel was held without bond in the Hyattsville jail for a preliminary hearing February 4. He was one of several suspects taken during an all-night search of the area by a posse of 50 volunteer firemen and 25 State and local policemen.

Laurel Police Chief George S. Barkman said Tillghman had confessed the attack late Saturday and during questioning admitted ownership of a hat found near the scene of the assault. Earlier, he had been identified by the victim in a police lineup, Barkman said.

The Federal Diary

by Jerry Kluttz

Hoover Commission Doesn't Favor Giving FSA Cabinet Rank

FSA: The Hoover Commission is shying away from recommending Cabinet status for the Federal Security Agency that would make it a center for health, education and security activities.

At a meeting last week, considerable opposition was expressed to such a plan which has been repeatedly indorsed by President Truman. Several members argued that any such department would be too big and too difficult to manage.

Instead, this counter suggestion was made: (1) that FSA be recast into a department of welfare that would have Cabinet status, and (2) that a new agency be set up to operate the Public Health Service, Government hospitals and medical research.

Chairman Herbert Hoover is reported to have asked his colleagues to give further study to the plans in hopes that a decision can be reached this week. But no matter what the Hoover Commission does, it's a good bet that the President will continue to push for a health, education and security department.

STORY: James R. Turner, the internal Revenue employe who won an Arthur S. Flemming Award as an outstanding young Federal employe, is as modest as they come.

The originator of simplified income tax forms that have saved the Government millions of dollars and the taxpayers thousands of headaches, was opposed to his name being entered in the Junior Board of Commerce contest. Also, he consented to having his picture taken only after he had been ordered to by a superior who told him his photograph was needed for a new building pass.

So it was tyical of him to give credit to his coworkers for the simplified tax tables and forms when he received the award. Fortunately for Turner, his bosses aren't as meek and mild, as they have promoted him to be a member of Commissioner Schoeneman's management staff.

SPECULATION: A lot of officials here will be relieved when the President publicly announces the job he will give his friend, Mon Walgren, the former Senator and Governor of Washington State.

As it is, rumor has Wallgren slated for these jobs: President of the Civil Service Commission, chairman of the Maritime Commission, and a top Interior post. Wallgren probably would prefer the latter.

In 1940, it's reported, Wallgren was ready to resign from Congress to accept an appointment to the Maritime Commission. Instead, he ran for the Senate and won, but the Maritime post was kept open for him.

The Civil Service chairmanship isn't ruled out because it's one of the few "available" jobs. Considerable jockeying would have to be done to put Wallgren on the Maritime Commission. But President Harry B. Mitchell is about ready to retire and his Civil Service post will be open.

HEARING EXAMINERS: Civil Service is now in the process of rating the first 1500 persons who applied for the hearing examiner test. It promises to set up an eligible register very soon. At the same time, it will notify the various agencies of the eligibility or ineligibility of their permanent status hearing examiners who are serving conditional appointments made June 11, 1947.

An entirely new personnel policy for hearing examiners was ordered by Congress when it approved the Administrative Practices Act several years ago. The test now being rated is the first to be held under that new law. The exam is still open and persons who have applied for the test recently or who will apply in the future will have their names added to the eligible register if they pass the test.

ICC: Several candidates are being pushed for the vacancy on the Interstate Commerce Commission. Among them are: James Knudsen, an Agriculture Department attorney, who has been promoting his ideas on better shipments of farm products, and Kenneth Potter, the utilities commissioner for the State of California.

JOBS: Applicants for patent advisers, P-3 through P-5, are being interviewed by the personnel office, Naval Research, Room 1070-T-3 Building, 17th st. and Constitution ave.

INTERIOR: Assistant Secretary C. Girard (Jebbie) Davidson is being built up to be Interior Secretary. A magazine piece is the latest in the campaign to promote him for the Cabinet post.

NOTES: John Shott, clerk to the Army Secretary, has been given the meritorious civilian award for his long and outstanding service . . . The Comptroller General has ruled that a Federal employe member of the National Guard who is ordered to attend an air intelligence officer course must do it on his own time . . . This week may bring favorable committee action on the bill to raise the Government travel allowance from $8 to $10 a day.

VA: A decision is near on the fate of the branch offices of the Veterans Administration. The best guess is that many of them will be either merged or abolished. Frankly, something must be done—and quick—on the branch offices as they don't have enough money to continue operating at their present strength. The 1950 proposed budget carries sharp reductions in personnel for the offices.

D. C. Woman Is Fatally Burned in Bed Blaze

Husband, Overcome By Smoke, Pulled From Their Room; Fireman Injured

A 45-year-old woman died last night of burns suffered during an early morning apartment fire in which she was trapped after her husband was rescued by another tenant.

Mrs. Mary Morgan was burned when her bed caught fire in her apartment at 2026 P st. nw., police said. Her husband, Marshall Morgan, 46, a driver for the Diamond Cab Co., was overcome by smoke but otherwise uninjured. The couple had no children.

The fire was first noted about 5:45 a. m. yesterday by Marine Master Sergt. Raymond McCoy, who lives upstairs in the same apartment house.

When he smelled the smoke and heard Mrs. Morgan scream, McCoy said, he ran to the first floor, kicked open the locked front door of the Morgan apartment, and dragged the husband from the smoke-filled room.

Flames and heavy smoke prevented him returning for Mrs. Morgan, police said McCoy told them. When firemen arrived, they found she had collapsed by the rear bedroom window.

Also injured in the blaze, largely confined to the bed itself, was Fireman Pvt. Robert A. Jacobs, 30, attached to No. 2 Truck Co. He received burns on the left hand and was given first aid on the scene. Firemen said they believed the blaze was started by a lighted cigarette.

Ban on Parking In Residential Areas Proposed

Howat Declares No Way Exists To Enforce Present Zoning Regulations

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

The way to attack the parking problem in residential areas of the District is to prohibit curb parking and thereby encourage construction of off-street facilities by private enterprise, a District official declared last night.

P. Y. K. Howat, head of the District Motor Vehicle Parking Agency, declared present zoning regulations requiring builders to provide car spaces for residents of new multiple housing "are accomplishing absolutely nothing in ending the parking problem," since residents are not forced to use the spaces and only new structures provide space.

Instead, he urged this program:

1. Make a comprehensive study of various sections of town to determine how many car spaces are necessary to accommodate vehicles of residents and those attracted to the area to use services in existing buildings.

2. If the difference between this total and the number of existing spaces is substantial, a group of District agencies including the Zoning Commission, Vehicles and Traffic and the Parking Agency should designate the sections as critical parking areas."

Would Set Time Limit

3. The District Commissioners would then be asked to limit curb parking in the target areas to five to eight hours, thus forcing residents, all-day parkers such as workers in the area, and long-period visitors to use off-street parking facilities.

4. This would act as an encouragement to private enterprise capital to undertake establishment of parking lots and garages and thus provide needed car spaces in the area. If the required number are produced in a year or 18 months, the Commissioners would be asked to lift the curb parking limitation and the curb spaces would be made available in addition to the new spaces to meet area expansion.

Howat, who operates a concrete firm but gives many hours to his unpaid parking assignment with the District government, has been quietly urging this plan of attack on the Commissioners' Advisory Committee on Zoning and Parking. At present, that group is meeting to write recommendations on how best to use zoning and parking regulations to overcome parking space shortages.

Howat is opposed to the present zoning regulations making it mandatory for builders to provide parking spaces either within new multiple housing structures or immediately adjacent to them. A proposal for amending this requirement to force builders of new hospitals, convalescent homes and schools to also provide some parking space for cars attracted by such facilities has been under study by District officials.

Builders Concur

Building industry men have concurred in Howat's position on this, declaring that the present rules are forcing real estate men to build outside the District and in addition, are not actually meeting the parking problem since residents are not forced to use provided spaces.

Howat yesterday quoted the example of the builder of an expensive hotel-apartment type structure who previded spaces at great cost only to find that residents did not use the facilities, preferring to park at the curb.

Another builder purchased high value land next door to his new building for parking spaces, Howat said. Later residents complained that headlights of "stay-out-lates" shone in their windows and disturbed their rest, so that the builder erected a wall around the lot and would not permit parking. Howat said this action was in full compliance with the zoning laws, but provided no parking spaces.

Plans Laid For Academy Of Fine Arts

Plans for establishment in Arlington of an academy of fine arts to serve Greater Washington were disclosed yesterday by Van Lier Lanning, music instructor in the Arlington school system, who will serve as director.

Lanning, founder and director of the Arlington Civic Symphony, revealed that he has bought a former warehouse at a cost of "more than $100,000" to serve as headquarters for the academy. Although he now is sole owner of the property, it soon will be taken over by a corporation now being formed, he added.

He did not identify other members of the corporation, but said they were "mostly Washingtonians," with several Arlington residents.

The warehouse, at 2601 Wilson blvd., will be renovated at a cost of about $30,000, Lanning said, and will be ready for opening of the school September 15. The building will include classrooms and a recital hall and theater with a seating capacity of 300, according to the plans.

The institution will be called the National Academy of Fine Arts, and will include six schools, offering instruction in music, drama, dancing, art, photography and education. The educational project, Lanning explained, will be a remedial school" for children with speech difficulties and other defects, operating on a full-day schedule in the elementary grades.

When full-scale operation gets under way, the academy will require the services of between 50 and 60 instructors, Lanning stated, though many will be employed only on a part-time basis.

City's Smaller Art Galleries Given Praise

Washington's smaller art galleries got a plug yesterday from Lawrence E. Gichner, who asked Washingtonians to wake up to "the wonderful works of art right here under their eyes."

Gichner, art chairman of the Board of Trade's Cultural Development Committee, took part in the board's "Your Town" radio program yesterday at 1:15 p. m. over WTOP.

Among the "smaller and perhaps less appreciated centers of art," Gichner listed: the Watkins Gallery at American University; Phillips Gallery, which owns Renoir's "The Houseboat," and numerous Daumiers; the Freer Gallery, with its collection of Far Eastern art, plus the paintings of James McNeill Whistler; the inter-racial sculpture and painting collection of Howard University.

Has Unusual Models

The Interior Department's museum, at 18th and C sts. nw., which includes models demonstrating dam construction, mine disasters, soil erosion, and formation of the earth, is another neglected point of interest, Gichner said.

Gichner gave the Capital's sightseeing "barkers" a pat on the back and said a personal check made recently by his committee showed their explanations of our cultural centers are "excellent."

George R. Titus, chairman of the Cultural Development Committee, explained the Board of Trade's active interest in the arts by saying, "better living makes for better business."

Objectives Outlined

The immediate objectives of the Cultural Development Committee were outlined by Titus as follows:

1. Advisory cooperation with the National Symphony in its $190,000 Sustaining Fund campaign, scheduled to begin February 3.

2. Indorsement of legislation for a permanent "Freedom Train," to be operated by the Archivist of the United States.

3. Formation of "a cohesive group in the area to explore the need for a civic theater."

4. Promotion of wider and deeper appreciation of the Capital's art treasure.

Senator Long to Speak

Senator Russell Long (D., La.), son of the late Huey Long, will address the Bethesda Kiwanis Club at its luncheon Tuesday at 12:15 p. m. in the Brook Farm Restaurant in Chevy Chase. Now a resident of Chevy Chase, Senator Long will be introduced by W. Prescott Allen, Kiwanis program chairman.

Civitans to Hear Talks

A discussion of the dental profession will feature the luncheon of the Washington Civitan Club Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. at the Mayflower Hotel. Speakers will be Eugene Merriman, Sydney Bennett and Wells Drumwright.

The Civitan board of directors will meet Tuesday at 8 p. m. at the home of Ashby Leeth, 7820 Aberdeen rd., Bethesda.

Slums Here Scored From Two Pulpits

Housing is the number one moral problem of the District, the Rev. Dr. John W. Rustin declared yesterday in a sermon at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, 900 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Dr. Rustin said very little can be done about housing problems here until we have home rule, because there is no one to ask for help in improving the situation.

At All Souls' Church (Unitarian), the Rev. Dr. A. Powell Davies deplored the fact that "good people" accept the fact that slums exist in the shadow of the Capitol.

"We marvel at an increase in crime," he declared. "What we should really marvel at is the absence of an epidemic!"

"If children that we knew were living under such conditions, or our own children, or those of our friends, we would hasten to rescue them," he continued. "Even children overseas, the human flotsam of Europe's desolation, we have pity for and try to save. But this is our own city, and what do we do?"

Jesus wouldn't last a year in any pulpit in Washington, Dr. Davis commented. He wouldn't just talk about Tract 48, the 31 city blocks bounded by New York, New Jersey, Florida aves. and 7th st. nw. which has often been described as one of the most congested in the city. He would go and live there.

The churches would find Jesus "intolerably embarrassing," the clergyman said, "the board of deacons would beg him to return to heaven, where, presumably, the slum question is well in hand and there is no racial discrimination."

"But then Jesus could never have got into such a difficulty in Washington—not with white people—because if Jesus was a true Galilean, he was almost certainly colored. Only lightly colored, of course, but still colored, so we can breathe freely after all. He might have lived in Tract 48 in the first place and we could all have shrugged him off."

Dr. Rustin's remarks were made in a sermon paying tribute to the late Rev. Dr. Peter Marshall, chaplain of the Senate and pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, 1301 New York ave. nw.

465 Young Arlington Pupils Found to Have Speech Defects

Speech defects have been discovered in 465 of the 7200 pupils in Arlington elementary schools, a survey by Mrs. Zelda Horner Kosh, part-time consultant in speech education, has revealed.

Representing about 6.4 per cent of the total school population, the figure is somewhat lower than the national average of 10 per cent for elementary schools, according to statistics made available to local school officials.

The survey, initiated by the new county school board last September as part of a program recommended by the Virginia Department of Education, led to discovery of 558 separate defects among the 465 children. All defects have been classified as in need of special speech training. Preliminary results indicate that all of the defects can be remedied, according to Mrs. Kosh.

Defects Being Studied

The deficiencies were discovered by Mrs. Kosh through consultation with teachers and principals, and are being studied further by Dr. Claire A. Christman, director of school health services for the county. Each child will be examined, and his speech analyzed to determine what corrective measures can be taken, school officials said.

Most serious, although not the most common, defect is stuttering, Mrs. Kosh said, with 88 children suffering this handicap. "Poor articulation," through which children either omit or add syllables to distort words, was the most common disorder, affecting 202 pupils.

Other defects discovered included voice disorders, through which pupils speak in abnormal tones; lisping and "cluttering," a term for speech so rapid that sounds are distorted by speed, Mrs. Kosh said.

A child's speech is deemed defective, Mrs. Kosh said, "when it is so different from that of his companions as to be noticeable."

General Program Planned

In addition to the survey, Mrs. Kosh is preparing to launch a general program of speech education in the county schools, following a pattern recommended by the State Department of Education.

The program will include three distinct types of education, including remedial work for those with defective speech, development of the talents of pupils with special abilities and training in everyday skills and in the speech arts for all youngsters.

Mrs. Kosh, who lives at 2249 N. Harrison st. Arlington, directed a high school speech program in New York City for eight years before coming to Arlington, and holds a master's degree in speech education from the teachers' college of Columbia University.

New Vote Bill Avoids Issue of Congress Seat

A bill giving Washington home rule, but making no mention of voting representation in Congress, is being prepared by the District Democratic Central Committee.

A. L. Wheeler, chairman of the Central Committee and its suffrage subcommittee, said Sunday the bill is being prepared at the request of Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), chairman of the Senate District Committee. It is hoped the bill will be ready when McGrath returns from Florida a week from today.

Wheeler's subcommittee has already finished the major draft of the bill and yesterday was starting to polish it up.

Congress Issue Avoided

No effort is being made to secure voting representation in Congress for the District, Wheeler said, because it was felt that such suffrage, requiring an amendment to the Constitution, "would raise collateral issues that might defeat the entire project."

It was felt best to fight for local suffrage first, Wheeler said, and adoption of the bill would not affect continuance of the Senate and House District Committees. Congress would have power to overrule the District Council that would be established.

The bill proposes that as a first step a referendum be held of all persons who have resided in the District a year or longer.

City Manager Favored

If a majority favored local self-government, a city manager form of government would then be established in conjunction with a 12-man District Council elected at large by the residents. The councilmen would have to be residents of the District for a year before election and would serve staggered four-year terms. Elections would be held biennially.

Wheeler said the District manager would be directly responsible to the District Council and held closely accountable to it.

The District Council, he said, would have many of the functions of a State legislature as well as a city council. He explained that it would have power to legislate on many matters beyond the province of city governments, but not be fully equivalent to a State legislature because of the Federal Government's presence here. "The District Council's actions would be subject, of course, to the reserve powers of Congress to modify or overrule," he said.

By giving the District Council some of the powers of a State Legislature, Wheeler said, it would provide "a broader home rule."

Will Consider Bill

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), chairman of the Home Rule and Reorganization Subcommittee of the Senate District Committee, who is hoping to have a home rule bill ready by April 1 for Senate action, said the Subcommittee will be glad to consider the local Democratic Central Committee's bill.

Kefauver said "we will give it every consideration, since it will have many worthwhile ideas, and do what we think is best."

Kefauver's committee plans to hold two brief sets of hearings prior to April 1 on home rule.

A simplified and shortened home rule bill already has been introduced in the House by Representative James C. Auchincloss (R., N. J.), whose plan last year failed of final action on the House floor because of Southern opposition, which is again present in this Congress.

Working on the Democratic Central Committee's bill are subcommittee members Gerhard Van Arkel, Harold J. Boisvert, J. C. Turner, Benjamin C. Sigal, Tom Morgan, jr., and Sturgis Warner and Alexander B. Hawes, members of the Washington Home Rule Committee.

Trade Board to Meet

The Silver Spring Board of Trade will meet Wednesday at 6:30 p. m. at the Indian Spring Club, at which time committee appointments for the new year will be announced by President Einar Christensen.

Lilly Windsor, 'Italian-Bred' U. S. Singer, Has Debut Here

By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post

LILLY WINDSOR
"My voice had a good top and bottom—but nothing in the middle"

"Just a country kid" who earned her first singing lessons by working in her father's grocery store will make her American debut at Constitution Hall Tuesday night after already starring with the Rome Royal Opera.

Attractive and vivacious Lilly Windsor, in this country for a year's concert tour, regaled an audience at the Carlton Hotel yesterday with amusing incidents of her career and expressions of wonder as to how a Hawthorne, N. Y., groceryman's daughter, who first sang at funerals and weddings, could win acclaim.

In rapid-fire patter, interspersed with jokes, Italian phrases and an infectious laugh, the slim 28-year-old brunette took less than an hour to complete her entertaining life history.

Her first audition was before Concert Manager J. J. Vincent, who thought her voice "had a good top and bottom but with nothing in the middle." But he was sufficiently impressed to begin training her voice.

After several years of study, she made her first debut in Amsterdam, Holland, where, according to Miss Windsor, her manager's success in finding coal to heat the concert auditorium was largely responsible for a sell-out house.

From the Netherlands she went to Rome to become the first American girl in 25 years to be engaged for a season in Rome's Opera House.

Elder Faces Charges in Girl's Denial

William S. Doleman, 56, of 801 Sligo prkwy., Takoma Park, Md., a church elder, was charged yesterday with subornation of perjury in the case of a 15-year-old girl who first accused an Alexandria minister of attacking her, then changed her story.

Held in $1000 bond with Doleman on the same charge was Mrs. Elizabeth Ford, 52, of 3755 Foote st. ne. Police accused her and Doleman of influencing Mary Holder, 15, of 1611 10th st. nw., to recant charges on which the Rev. William Henry Powell of the Evangelical Christian Church, 710 N. Henry st., Alexandria, Va., faced trial Wednesday in District Court.

A charge that the Alexandria minister had had carnal relations with the girl, in whose home he roomed, was dismissed when the girl told Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut he had "never put his hands on me."

Detectives who made the arrests yesterday charged that the girl was induced to recant her original story by being told that Mr. Powell, as a minister, was an agent of God and she would never get to Heaven if she accused him in court.

Mrs. Ford, police said, stated she is a domestic. The pair was released in $1000 bond each for appearance in District Court today.

Doleman said he is an elder of the First Evangelical Christian Church, 401 Massachusetts ave. nw., and also does repair work for a Takoma Park real estate firm.

Two Men Stab Each Other Fatally In Street Fight

Two men stabbed each other to death yesterday in a fight with knives in the 700 block of L st. nw., police reported.

Jesse Coles, sr., 52, of 1409 10th st. nw., died last night in Freedmen's Hospital of stab wounds in the chest and neck, about 20 hours after the fight, in which John Dennis Thompson, 21, of no fixed address, was fatally stabbed.

Police said they were unable to learn how the fight started or what the men were fighting about. They said persons living nearby reported they saw the two men talking, then suddenly each drew a knife and started slashing at the other. Thompson was dead when police arrived.

Orchestra to Give Winter Concert

The Alexandria Civic Orchestra will present the first winter concert in its four-year history on Thursday at 8:15 p. m. at the Cameron Recreation Center.

Alexandria Loses Legion Convention

Lynchburg, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Alexandria, it appears, will not play host to the Virginia Department of the American Legion at its convention in August following action taken by the department executive committee at a meeting here today.

Disqualification of Alexandria as convention city, according to Department Commander J. Westwood Smithers, came after Post 24 refused to paricipate in arranging the convention unless it was given exclusive control of all details except arrangements for speakers. The executive committee refused to accede.

Action of Post 24 was announced to the executive committee by its commander, Ralph A. Sentman. It is contrary to policy established in earlier years, Smthers said.

Quotes 1943 Resolution

He quoted a resolution of the department's 1943 convention setting up a "convention committee."

The resolution states in part that "the program at the department convention and at Statewide department conferences shall be prepared and approved by this committee."

Sentman, a retired Naval commander and president of Naval Officers Placement Service, Inc., in Washington, said at his Alexandria home last night that Post 24 withdrew its invitation when "they decided to make the program committee a convention committee."

The practice hitherto has been for the host post to assume responsibility for housing, registration and all other arrangements but the program, and to gain or lose financially by it, he said.

"They also wanted to have the Willard Hotel in Washington as convention headquarters, and we couldn't see that."

The executive committee's action came after a 2½-hour session, reported to be stormy at times. Alexandria was designated as the convention site at a meeting last August 25.

Smithers said he was empowered by the committee tonight to appoint a committee of nine members, one from each congressional district in the State, to select a new convention site.

Student Art Exhibit Opens Here . . .

The Washington Post

CREATIONS IN CLAY—Susan Cane and Clarissa Craig, both of 4029 Benton st. nw., turn spectator for a critical glance at their respective clay sculptures at the student art exhibit at Washington Workshop Cooperative. The girls, researchers for the State Department, took up sculpture only last year at the Workshop without previous training

Workshop Sculpture Exhibitor, 55, Took Up Art 2 Years Ago

Arch B. Clark, whose sculpture in marble and clay is on view at the student art exhibit of the Washington Workshop Cooperative, never gave a thought to sculpting till he was 53.

Clark, who lives at 7403 16th ave., Takoma Park, Md., is an administrator in the Venereal Disease section of the United States Public Health Service. He said yesterday he took up sculpturing two years ago because "I wanted some appealing activity for the time when I retire."

After years of patching up broken china for various friends, Clark said, he met his first real challenge in a china "Fu dog." The dog, one of a pair, had been knocked down and all its face but the lower jaw destroyed.

With clay and lacquer Clark reconstructed the animal to match its mate.

"I just did it because everybody said it couldn't be done. From a distance it was a good job," he added with pride.

Encouraged by his success, Clark began work at home on a portrait bust of his wife, turned to the Workshop when he decided he could use some instruction, and has been sculpting happily ever since.

One of about 85 spare-time artists whose work will be on view at the Washington Workshop Cooperative, 2020 Massachusetts ave. nw., through February 11, Clark is a fairly typical student.

More than 75 per cent of the Workshop artists are beginners, says program director Leon Berkowitz, who thinks "a strong interest is sufficient indication of talent."

Ranging in age from a 16-year-old high school student to 55-year-old Clark, pupils include a hairdresser, druggist and a builder. About 30 per cent of them are housewives, another 30 per cent are secretaries, and more than 40 per cent are professional workers.

Most students come to the once-a-week evening classes at the Workshop for relaxation. But a questionaire taken some time ago by the cooperative revealed plenty of by-products. Students made such statements as "I feel it's improved my personality," "I enjoy life more," and "It's made me more tolerant."

Classes at the nonprofit Workshop, which charges an average of $25 per course for the 13-week semester, start this week. Classes in oils, drawing, anatomy, etching and lithography, and sculpture will be given.

Illuminated Books Shown In Baltimore

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Dazzling as gems, approximately 200 illuminated books of the Middle Ages and Renaissance went on display this week at the Baltimore, Md., Museum of Art.

The show, organized by the Walters Art Gallery under the supervision of Miss Dorothy E. Miner in cooperation with the Museum, at N. Charles and 31st sts., will continue until March 13.

More than a score of institutions, among them the Library of Congress and the National Gallery of Art, and private collectors in all parts of the United States have loaned material for the exhibit.

First in America

The show is the first attempt at a comprehensive display of the finest illuminated manuscripts in America. Probably the only important material in the country that will not be shown is that in institutions whose charters forbid loans. Because of its scope, the show is expected to attract national, and even international, attention.

Though the manuscripts on display indicate the development of European thought during these centuries, their selection for display was based on their beauty, and in this respect also they reveal much of the history of art during these centuries—the development of perspective as an artistic device, for example.

The first exhibit the visitor sees as he enters the show is a large manuscript of the Four Gospels written throughout in powdered gold, and burnished, upon purple leaves. The effect of the manuscript, believed to have been prepared in northern France in the early part of the ninth century, is that of ecclesiastical pomp and circumstance.

Belonged to Henry VIII

The book, which once belonged to Henry VIII of England, is one of the few in the show that is without decoration, achieving its effect purely through the use of color and beauty of lettering.

Another of the early manuscripts, and particularly rare of its kind, is a psalter done in southern England in the Eighth Century, with letters in an interlaced Anglo-Saxon design in several colors. Written in Latin, there is additional writing in Anglo-Saxon—and on the margin of a leaf is an early drawing that looks suspiciously like a doodle of a man in a conical headdress.

In an Eleventh Century manuscript from southern Italy, executed in one of the dependencies of the Abbey of Monte Cassino, Christ is shown seated within the initial letter "V," surrounded by the symbols of the Four Evangelists. Drawn in blue, green and other colors, His face has an appealing simplicity.

In contrast to the formalism of many of the manuscripts, artistically speaking, is a rhymed version of the Bible, "Chronicle of the World," by a Swiss poet, Rudolf von Ems. The manuscript, completed in 1492 in Germany, is opened to show text and a drawing of Balaam and the Ass, and the words and picture flow together a feeling almost as modern as Picasso.

Indicative of how far manuscripts traveled and how much they were held in esteem, is a series of illustrations from the Old Testament, done in France about 1250. The margins bear inscriptions in Fourteenth Century Italian handwriting, and in Seventeenth Century Persian and Hebrew. The latter two sets of inscriptions were explanations of the pictures written for Shah Abbas the Great of Persia.

Among the manuscripts of a later period is a leaf from a book illustrated by Jean Foucquet about 1465. An illustration for the Vespers of the Holy Ghost, it portrays the sacred scene in Paris in the artist's time, with the Seine River and the Cathedral of Notre Dame in the background. Foucquet was the greatest painter that France had produced up to his time, and the painting is the only one by him in the United States.

New Ordnance Laboratory to Be Dedicated

Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air John Nicholas Brown will be the principal speaker when the central unit of the new 35 million dollar Naval Ordnance Laboratory at White Oak, Md., is dedicated today.

Secretary Brown will dedicate the administration and main laboratory building of the 938-acre research and development center in ceremonies beginning at 9:30 a. m. in the building's auditorium.

He will share the platform with Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the National Bureau of Standards, who will be the principal scientific speaker, and Rear Admiral Albert G. Noble, chief of the Navy's Bureau of Ordnance. More than 600 guests have been invited.

The visiting dignitaries and guests will be introduced by Rear Admiral Frank E. Beatty, commander of the new laboratory which is situated about three miles from Silver Spring.

The program will be opened with an invocation by Rear Admiral William N. Thomas, chief of Navy chaplains, who performed a similar service on August 15, 1946, when the cornerstone for the Administration and Main Laboratory Building was officially laid by then Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal.

The building to be dedicated is actually five buildings connected in a group to appear essentially as one.

Decided on in 1929

In the fifth building, at the rear of the rectangle, is a cafeteria, an auditorium, an air-conditioning plant and several small offices.

The Naval Ordnance Laboratory came into official existence in 1929 when a joint committee from the Bureau of Ordnance and the Washington Navy Yard, which is now known as the Naval Gun Factory, decided to merge the yard's mine laboratory and its explosives laboratory under that title.

During World War II, the need for a separate Naval Ordnance Laboratory became evident and in 1945 ground was first broken at White Oak for the buildings which will be dedicated Monday.

There are now more than 60 permanent buildings on the grounds, with 34 temporary structures in use and nine more permanent buildings under construction. About 2300 persons—at least a third of them scientific and technical personnel—are employed there.

It is expected to have the complete Naval Ordnance Laboratory operating at White Oak by next fall.

Following the dedication ceremonies, the laboratory grounds will be thrown open from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. to more than 7500 scientists and engineers from all parts of the country who have been invited to inspect the new plant.

Among the exhibits they will see the captured German supersonic wind tunnels, modernized and reerected at White Oak, in which Navy scientists recently achieved a world speed record of 5.18 times the speed of sound.

They will also see the world's first mobile betatron, a 10-million-volt X-ray generator capable of penetrating 16 inches of steel.

Gives Us Bouquet While We Can Still Smell Flowers; Then Jacks Us Up for Not Providing Immediate Solution for Every Case Discussed

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Such an interesting cross-section of life comes to light in your column that I never miss an issue, and sooner or later you touch on problems known to all of us. You have been of great help during a trying year, not only to me, but to countless others, and I want to give you a bouquet while you can still smell the flowers.

However, certain questions stir in my mind as I "listen" to your advice. Frequently you indicate that psychiatric help is needed; and you say this as if such help were obtainable in any locality, even at the corner grocery. But surely you realize that psychiatry is out of reach of the average person, not only financially but because there are so few psychiatrists.

Moreover, the average mental hygiene clinic wouldn't handle problems of maladjusted love life, when urgent cases of actual mental illness are pressing for attention. Thus for anyone to approach psychiatry with a personal problem presupposes lots of time and money to spend on specialist treatment.

Wants Us to Make Her Days Happier

YET SUPPOSING the writer can get psychiatric therapy, how many "problem" factors in her environment can be changed? Suppose she has a husband who, though sweet in many ways, seems unable to succeed in anything he's tried. That her teen-age daughter, though beautiful above the average, is at the foot of her class in school.

That there is a paralyzed father, or an invalid sister who has gained no benefit from constant medical treatment; and that the writer feels with certainty, now, that she is doomed to carry these problems indefinitely, and that her youth is slipping away. In such case, what changes can be wrought, leading to permanent "help" for the writer? Or is she to adjust herself to her circumstances as they are, with a more adult acceptance of life's burdens?

If one is not to reach, in any way, even a semblance of perfection, why was the urge so deeply implanted? Must life be always striving, never realization? Please, Mary, write practical help, which may in some way give the average reader greater insight into her problems, so that she can face a brighter day tomorrow

B. H.

Writer's Attitude Is Too Demanding

DEAR B. H.: As for that practical insight you would have me give in every case, correspondents make that impossible, very often, by failing to come clean about what ails them. Your letter is a good example of what I mean.

You don't want to air your problem, and yet you want me to illumine the way over, under, around or through it—in a few words addressed to somebody else.

Also indirectly you are saying that you are interested in psychiatry and have a hunch that it might help you; but you are vexed with me for speaking about it, inasmuch as I can't point to a plentiful, cheap supply of it. All of which is a too-demanding attitude, since none of us can be all things to all people; and since scarcities and inequities are inescapable facts of life.

All but a fortunate few in society need better housing, more and better food, health care, educational opportunities, etc., to make their existence zestful; but we don't hesitate to stress the need of these things, simply because abundant supply is not yet forthcoming.

Utopia Isn't Upon Us Yet

ABOUT psychiatry: It's function, as generally applied to maladjusted or mentally ill persons, is to help them see straight, as regards their quarrel with environment, so that they will be better able to decide what details they can change or rearrange; what hopes were blind, what perfection-drives were senseless, and what progress can be made, feet on the ground, if they will cope realistically.

So, in making reply to stymied or distrait persons whose petitions reveal that, for the time being, they can't see straight as regards multiple anxieties, it were less than honest to write as if the basic problem were on the table; and in such case, the correspondent is advised that further careful study and firsthand help are necessary to bring him out of the woods. But I do not and cannot guarantee that his special needs of the sort will be met; for plainly Utopia is not upon us yet.

You Can Learn a Lot at the YWCA

By Charles Del Vecchio—The Washington Post

The oil painting classes are open to beginners like Mrs. Drucilla Bayer (left) and to advanced students like Miss Pauline Conley (right) who goes to Corcoran Art School, too. Jozef Pielage (center), one of the instructors, says that about $10 worth of supplies will take care of most beginner's needs

Adult Education Program Covers Most Every Field

By Sonia Stein

DO YOU have a leaky faucet? A dyspeptic husband? A latent talent? A shattered nerve? A driving ambition?

The Washington YWCA's adult education program, which begins a new semester Monday night, offers a course to take care of each condition and more besides.

Among the 54 subjects being offered—to both men and women—are academic courses and practical courses. Very, very practical.

The cooking class, for example, which appeals mostly to brides, starts with a girl who isn't sure just how to break an egg, and turns out a girl who can cook a complete meal, play gracious hostess and guide a maid in serving. Menu planning is also part of the course, which has weekly dividends in the form of a complete meal which the class prepares and serves on a properly set table.

The Handy Woman course runs the cooking course neck and neck in its popularity with husbands—as a class for their wives, to be sure.

Handywomen

THE little woman who can fix her own vacuum cleaner instead of spending money to have it repaired, the little woman who can change the washer on a dribbling faucet instead of wheedling her husband into fixing it, is on a par in husbandly affection with the woman who can bake an apple pie.

Home management, a course to teach a woman how to run her home charmingly and efficiently on a limited budget, whether it's a boarding house room or a large house, also has its devoted admirers. Classes in dress design, millinery, dressmaking, tailoring, interior decorating, flower arrangement and modern marriage and a mothers' forum are also offered in the homemaking section.

For latent talents there are courses in water color, sketching and pastels and in oil painting. Ceramics and handcraft and photography also come under the arts and crafts division.

Oil painting is being taken up by beginners at very far from tender ages all over the country for relaxation as well as self expression. Actually it requires small investment in supplies. "A $10 bill will buy all the brushes and paint necessary," says Jozef Pielage, one of the instructors. "I tell the students to put their supplies in a paper bag. After they've tried painting for a while and find they like it, is time enough to buy a box."

A study course of art in Washington galleries is also on the curriculum.

Bridge lessons are available both by day and by night. Two graduates just won the north Virginia championships.

Contest Writing

SEVERAL students in the contest writing course have put their training to very practical value. One has already won $2000 in various contests, another won $50 last week. The teacher, Mrs. Florence Stellwagen, recently acquired $25 worth of groceries in a contest.

For budding or full-blown writers, there are courses offered in the short story, the magazine article, radio scripts and writing for the juvenile market.

For people with a burning ambition to improve themselves, there are glasses in diction, personality development, style-beauty-posture, adult reading (to increase both speed and comprehension and memory training.

French, German, Spanish and Russian and Portugese, and an English course for foreigners are taught.

Singing, sight reading at the piano, and the art of teaching music to children under 6, storytelling and effective public speaking courses are given. A survey of culture, a study of the news behind the headlines and this semester's new addition. The Social and Economic Development of the United States, are available.

Business Training

FOR those with an ambition to better themselves in business, there are courses in shorthand, typing, bookkeeping and the techniques of a good receptionist.

Some of the courses are day courses, some evening. They run 6, 8, 10 and 15 weeks in length and range in tuition fee from $4 to $20 per course.

The courses, which are given in a summer and two winter semesters, had an enrollment last year of 5300 students, with many of these taking more than one course. In spite of the large registration, those classes which profit most by individual instruction are kept small.

Classes start this week, but registrations for those classes not yet filled will be accepted this, week and even later. Information is available on the sixth floor of the YWCA at 17th and K sts., where the classes are held.

MRS. MORRIS ATKINS, whose marriage took place on January 23, is the former Miss Bertha Nussbaum, daughter of Daniel Nussbaum. The ceremony took place at Beth El Synagogue, with Rabbi M. H. Levinson officiating. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an aqua crepe gown with a corsage

Teacher Howard Ennes (right) shows Mrs. Charles S. Payne the fine points of keeping a spigot under control. The vacuum cleaner and electric bell also come in for study in this course in the YWCA's adult education program which begins another semester next week

Keep In Trim

Overeating Is Mostly a Habit, And Fat the Result Thereof

SINCE IT ISN'T fun to be fat, overindulgence in fattening foods definitely cramps your style. Looking at it from that angle, suddenly it seems silly to take the second helpings and the in-between-meal snacks.

Overeating is largely habit. With the right food pattern you won't have to struggle against hot fudge sundaes and lemon meringue pie the rest of your natural life. You CAN get over your craving for fattening foods! If I didn't know this to be absolutely true, I would not promise it. Again and again reducers write to exclaim about this miracle . . . they, too, could not believe that they would no longer love to overeat.

One friend told me that even if she could go back to her old ways of eating without fear of gaining weight, she would not want to, for her new food pattern gives her so much more bounce and verve.

Two things help to turn the trick. One, the scientifically planned diet provides perfect nutrition which does away with any hidden inner craving for nutrients missing from the daily fare. And, second, habit works for slimming, too . . . you learn to prefer the foods that control weight. Then eating to keep slim is habit.

Quite frankly I'm against the off again, on again, slim again, fat again diets. They do nothing toward changing the food habits that are to blame for the fat in the first place . . . and, for that matter, in the second place, too.

Try eating to lose weight—try it for three weeks. You may lose slightly more than one-third pound a day, and you may lose less. It depends on the total amount of overweight. With considerable excess weight, there is more in soft, easy-to-lose fat. Another factor is water storage. If you have not lost any weight yet, then it's altogether likely water is being stored in the tissues as the fat is lost. Keep right on with the diet—when this water balance adjusts, several pounds will be missing, seemingly lost all at once. It may take 16 days, but if your daily calories are below the number used . . . you are losing, regardless of what the scales report.

Brazilian Embassy Fete Highlights Day

By Norma Lanum

THE Brazilian Embassy was the scene of what was probably yesterday's largest and gayest cocktail party. The Ambassador, Mauricio Nabuco, received several hundred guests between 6 and 8 to meet Brazil's favorite son in the musical world, Heito Villa Lobos. Senor Lobos was guest conductor at the National Symphony Orchestra afternoon concert and the baton was barely out of his grip before he found himself receiving with his Ambassador at the Embassy.

Ambassador Nabuco's sister-in-law, Senora Jose Nabuco, and the composer's wife assisted in welcoming the guests.

The former conducter of the National Symphony, Dr. Hans Kindler, and Mrs. Kindler were there, and so were the present conductor and Mrs. Howard Mitchell.

Others glimpsed here and there were Mr. and Mrs. James Houghteling, Mrs. Theodore Dominick, Mrs. Norman Littell, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Daniels, Mrs. George Sloane, George Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilds, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss and Gen. and Mrs. Wade Haislip.

The Family Scrapbook

A month or so ago a letter from a Boston mother posed a question that concerns many parents. In her neighborhood, most of the mothers feel it is a shocking thing to answer children's questions about sex. When their children ask where babies come from or what the difference is between boys and girls they tell them they're not old enough to talk about such things.

The letter, signed, "Conscientious Mother" asks: "At what age do you feel children asking these questions should be answered truthfully?"

The evidence seems unmistakably clear. One should be direct and honest in answering any questions children ask. If they are put off or are told some fairy story, their curiosity becomes sharpened and they seek answers elsewhere.

The best place for children to learn "the facts of life" is in the home and the best time is whenever they ask questions.

Even 3-year-olds can understand some of these things on a simple level. If parents' own education has been lacking in this respect and they don't know what to say, there are good books that give practical help. Any public library should be able to refer an interested parent to several helpful volumes.

Survey Shows

Few Women Able to Crash 'Man's World'

The Labor Department said yesterday that few women have been able to invade the "so-called masculine domains" of agriculture, law medicine, clergymen, funeral director and aviator in the past 70 years.

In a study of women's occupations since 1870, it said that training requirements and public apathy have been the principal reason for this development.

The survey was made by Janet M. Hooks because of the tremendous increase in the number of permanent women workers during and since World War II. It showed that in 1879 there were two million women workers, or about 10 percent of the total working forces. The number reached a peak of 20,600,000 in July, 1944, and has since receded to about 17 million.

Employment as domestic servants was the field which used more women than any other throughout 70 years. It still remains the biggest women's occupation.

Through Darkest Closet With Hook, Rod and Rule

By Ann Pringle

THERE are no skeletons in closets any more—there isn't room enough. It's problem enough just trying to fit clothing into them.

If you've had to dismiss, for lack of space or money, the idea of buying extra storage pieces, there are still tricks you may not have tried for increasing your closet's efficiency.

Take a look at the closet's side walls. They are probably deep enough so space is left between the edge of the hanging clothes and the door wall. Put two or three hooks there, the first as high as you can reach, the last just low enough so things can hang without dragging. On the top one hang belts, on the second scarfs and on the third knitting bags or pocketbooks with handles.

Top shelves usually are too deep for efficiency. Add another, shallower shelf. Or plan partitions that will make a vertical filing system, if your boxes and things arrange themselves better that way. On the inside of a closet door you might tack two envelope-style bags, in which to store stockings and lingerie.

To increase the number of garment's an average-width closet can hold, there's a new plastic hanger that looks like a flat ruler with a hook on the end. Each side of the ruler, running downward left and right, are three cut-out holes for hangers. You can thus hang six garments, three on each side, on the stagger system. They take up less room than when hung from the main rod because the shoulders, where a dress or jacket is thickest, aren't all on the same level.

About Wardrobe For Western Trip

I am contemplating a trip to Santa Fe, New Mexico and Los Angeles, Calif., soon. What is the weather like there at this time of year, and what clothes will I need? A. S. L.

Predicting weather in southern California and New Mexico has become a little like predicting elections—uncertain. However weather there at this season would call for the same clothes worn here in the fall—suits, two-piece silk and rayon dresses for the warmer days and a between-season coat to wear over the suits or dresses in the evenings and on chilly days.

Place the skirt upside down on a well-padded ironing board. Slightly dampen it with a wet cloth and press with a hot iron.

How can I clean children's stuffed toys? I don't know how to describe the covering except it is fuzzy. J. W. M.

You can clean the toys by shampooing them. Make a soap jelly by dissolving 1 cup mild soap flakes or chips in 2 cups warm water. Allow to cool and become jellied. Place some of the jelly in a large bowl and whip with an egg-beater. Be sure to make enough, because you clean with the suds alone. Using a brush, work the suds into the pile of the toy. Work over only a small area at a time and when the suds become soiled, remove them with the blade of a dull knife and put on fresh suds. Continue scrubbing until the area is clean. Remove suds and sponge area with a cloth wrung out of clear water until thoroughly rinsed. Continue scrubbing, area by area, until the piece is all washed. Work quickly so the stuffing is not soaked. Hang toy in a well-ventilated place to dry.

PETUNIA!

I'm sure I could lecture
For hours and hours
On what I don't know about
Caring for flowers.

That's apparent, Petunia! Never cut roses with scissors. Use a sharp knife at a slanting angle. And don't arrange them in shallow bowls—in needle holders—or in a crowded bunch.

Bishop-Bracken

During the snow a few weeks ago, a friend sat on a chartreuse plastic chair with wet trousers and the dye from his trousers left an ugly brown stain on the seat of the chair. If you can give me any information as to how to remove this stain, I shall be very grateful. E. E.

I'm sorry, I know of no way to remove the stain. However, you could cover it by applying a plastic coating. This coating comes in many colors so you should be able to find one which would hide the stain nicely and go with your color scheme. For further information about the coating, call District 1130.

A few years ago, before the war, I used to get German sweet chocolate and a recipe with it (which was printed on the wrapper) of chocolate ice box cake or pudding. This recipe contained no gelatin. Is there any place in Washington I can obtain this? If not, I would like a recipe of chocolate ice box cake or pudding which is made without gelatin. R. L.

I'm sorry I can't be of much help to you in getting the original recipe. However, here is a recipe for a chocolate pudding which uses sweet chocolate:

Sweet Chocolate Sponge

8 ounces sweet chocolate, grated
4 tablespoons strong coffee
1 tablespoon rum or 1 teaspoon other flavoring, such as vanilla
5 egg yolks, beaten
5 egg whites, stiffly beaten

Melt chocolate over hot water with coffee. Stir in rum or flavoring and beaten egg yolks. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Cool. Carefully fold in egg whites and pour into individual serving dishes. Chill for 30 minutes in refrigerator. This dessert will keep for several days if closely covered. Yield: Six to eight portions.

LOOK OUT FOR PIN-WORMS

Recent medical reports reveal that an amazing number of children (and grown-ups too) may be victims of Pin-Worms—often without suspecting what is wrong! And these pests, living inside the human body, can cause real distress.

So watch out for the warning signs that may mean Pin-Worms—especially the aggravating rectal itch. Get JAYNE'S P-W and follow the directions.

P-W is the Pin-Worm treatment developed in the laboratories of Dr. D. Jayne & Son, after years of patient research. The small, easy-to-take P-W tablets act in a special way to remove Pin-Worms.

Ask your druggist: P-W for Pin-Worms!

Former Student Artist Here Chosen to Paint Huge Mural

A former student of Corcoran Art School has been commissioned to paint what is reported will be the largest mural ever done in this country by a woman.

Mrs. O'Brien

She is Mrs. Frances O'Brien, now of New York, and her 13-foot high painting will cover the wall of the top-floor round room of an old Alabama mansion, which is being restored. The wall is 88-feet in circumfenence.

The mansion, which rests on the crest of Shades Mountain, six miles south of Birmingham, is a prototype of the ancient Temple of Vesta. It's a circular building of four stories surrounded by a two story porch. Mrs. O'Brien's painting, which will be in the temple room, will be an interpretation of the legend of Vesta. Birmingham's debutantes and young matrons will be models. The work is to be completed April 1.

In addition to her studies at Corcoran the artist attended the Art Students' League in New York and the Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts.

Meat Loaf Variation

Next time you make a meat loaf, cover the top with mashed potatoes just before serving and brown under the broiler.

Notables' Portraits To Be on Exhibit At Corcoran Feb. 6

Portraits of President Truman, Margaret Truman, the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. John W. Snyder and their daughter, Drucie, are among those to be shown by artist Greta Kempton in an exhibition opening February 6 at the Corcoran Art Gallery and continuing through February 27.

A preview and reception will be held for special guests and members of the Association of the Corcoran Gallery of Art on Saturday, February 5.

Told by the Laundress

Smoothness and glossiness can be obtained when ironing starched pieces by stirring the starch with a paraffin candle three or four times while boiling and just ready to remove.

One on the Aisle—

Sunny California Puts 'Em on Ice

By Richard L. Coe

ABOUT THE TOWN: Backstage at Uline's, premiere Ice-Capetite Donna Atwood snuggles into her mink and talks about the rigors of being a Queen of the Ice . . . Donna's a Newton, Kans., girl who didn't try on skates till she was 13, about 10 years ago . . . She had, though, "taken" dancing ever since she was a tyke and once she got to skating she found that what she'd learned about dancing was mighty handy . . . Like so many ice-capeople, Donna learned about ice in California, but don't ask why so many people learn to skate in sunny California . . . NOBODY'S got the answer to that . . . Her folks had moved to Los Angeles, where she took to skates and, only a few months later, to those trophies sportsfolk pick up . . . In a couple of years she became a national champion . . . She joined "Ice-Capades" when the show was young—this is its ninth year—and quickly got a spot of her own . . . Since then she's been the Maria Montez of the blades, playing Cleopatra one year, under direction of famed Chandra Kaly, Scheherazade for another edition, coached by the fabulous Ruth St. Dennis, and Carmen, or a facsimile thereof, under the tutelege of Eduardo Cansino, Rita Hayworth's dad . . . Now Donna is Snow White, with the blessing of Walt Disney and gosh only knows what Chester Hale will think up for her next season . . . John H. Harris' ice-cafolk tour about 10 months a year, working on plans for the next edition while ensconced before the Atlantic City vacationists in the summer . . . It's a busy grind and extra-curricular activities include a full calendar of radio interviews and lunches . . . Like today's at the Touchdown Club, at which Donna will be the first female honor guest since Babe Didrikson Zaharias took a bow . . . Donna's nervous about that.

VALERIE WARDE and the junior students of her Dupont Circle drama school are polishing up a double bill for tomorrow night at 7:45 in the Cafritz Auditorium, 16th and Q sts. . . . First of the evening will be a unique adaptation of "Alice in Wonderland," featuring four Alices: Barbara Crain, Kathy Rosskopf, Susanne Herlihy and Marilyn Winston . . . Bonnie Lynne Magruder will be the White Rabbit, Ginger Ann Rawley, the Red Queen . . . Baby of the cast is Ida Sue Bush, who's all of 3! . . . Second half of the evening is a three-act comedy with a title the youngsters will know: "A Date With Judy" . . . Cast of this will include Nell Wicker, Ted Dyer, George Tennyson and Elizabeth Shanklin; all the cast of "Judy" are teen-agers.

MARY CARDWELL-DAWSON is preparing a production of "Aida" for the National Negro Opera Co., and is looking for actors as well as singers, any race, either sex . . . Mrs. Dawson, recalling her tough luck with the weather in last year's open-air production, is going under a roof for this "Aida," which will be given at the Armory on April 30 . . . Those interested in joining the Verdi company should contact her at 1037 Evarts st. ne., or phone DEcatur 5232.

TO STRAY MORE COMPLETELY into Paul Hume's bailiwick, this is a good spot for a hail and farewell . . . To concert manager Patrick Hayes and to Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey, whose artists next year will be presented by Mr. Hayes . . . Mrs. Dorsey's concerts have made her a pillar of the Capital's musical community and to old residents her retirement will mean more than just that . . . On death of her aunt, Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, Mrs. Dorsey took over her interests, thereby continuing a family line of note, for Mrs. Wilson-Greene's name long appeared linked with the great artists of the past . . . The zestful Pat's face is familiar here, too . . . once manager of the National Symphony, he served the Navy as an officer during the war, returning to the symphony, but founding his own bureau two years ago. . . . Pat and his wife, Pianist Evelyn Swarthout, live in Alexandria with their two children . . . Last fall he was elected first president of the newly formed National Association of Concert Managers. . . . So, singers and artists of the future will be receiving the welcome of a familiar face.

THE NEWSTANDS are carrying a particularly illuminating study of Hollywood in the New Republic of January 31 . . . Granted, some of you folks wouldn't dare be seen with a copy of this magazine, but take it from a Yankee Republican there's nothing to taint you in this reportage . . . Its contributors on Hollywood are eminently respectable: Director Lewis Milestone, Producer-Professor Kenneth MacGowan, the New York Times' Hollywood man Thomas F. Brady, Novelist-Playwright Ernest Pascal, Paul Jerrico, who's collaborated on such films as "The Search" and "As Thousands Cheer," and Robert Shaw, of the Screen Writers Guild . . . The articles are interesting and I was struck with the fact that several points this column frequently stresses were viewed in the same light . . . Here's one sentence: "Hollywood produces fewer and fewer pictures out of its own creative resources; pathetically and eagerly it borrows" . . . But all the writers have optimistic conclusions.

LAST NIGHT'S gala benefit for the March of Dimes at the Playhouse attracted a sparkling audience, headed by the First Lady and Miss Truman . . . Mrs. Richard Harless, the former Meredith Howard, entertained for Tenor Nino Martini before the performance . . . Of the sum netted for the Paralysis Fund and of "Monsieur Vincent" more in the future.

"SNEAK PREVIEW TONIGHT" proclaims the Palace Theater . . . "The Snake Pit" winds up its stay tonight, with Bob Hope's "The Paleface" opening tomorrow . . . But don't ask me if the Hope spoof is the 11:15 "sneak." . . . I don't know either.

World Bank's 6-Month Profit Is 4.8 Million

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development yesterday reported a net profit for the six months ended December 31, of $4,804,057 as compared with $439,925 for the first half of the preceding fiscal year. The bank's fiscal year ends June 30.

Gross income amounted to $12,735,974 as compared with $7,474,878. In the period ended last December 31, commissions amounting to $2,444,629 of the gross income were set aside in the special reserve, bringing the total as of that date to $5,529,559. A commission of 1 per cent a year has been charged by the bank on all loans.

During the six-month period disbursements on loans aggregated $29,032,107, bringing the total disbursements as of December 31, to $499,087,858 since the bank began operations in 1946. Since December 31 this total has been increased to more than a half billion dollars. Total loan commitments as of December 31, were 525 million dollars. This figure since that date has increased to $634,100,000 as a result of loans for electric power development in Mexico and Brazil.

ITU Votes to End Strike Against Hammond Times

Chicago, Jan. 30 (AP).—The Chicago local of the AFL International Typographical Union voted today to end its prolonged strike against the Hammond (Ind.) Times.

It was the first break in the 14-month-old dispute by the ITU local against five Chicago newspapers and the Hammond Times.

However, both a union spokesman and W. J. Harrigan, business manager of the Hammond Times, said the agreement would have "no effect whatsoever" on the Chicago dispute.

The agreement called for acceptance of a contract granting a $12.50 wage increase.

Amvets Won't Hold Up Plane Won by Negro

Dalton, Ga., Jan. 30 (AP).—Pharris Moore, a Negro, won an airplane in a local Amvets program, and Post Commander James Starke said today he would get it without an argument.

Starke recalled that last year a Negro won an automobile on a similar program in North Carolina, and was at first refused it. He said there would be no balk here.

"This," he addad, "might be news to papers in the North and East."

Shirley Temple Tops Lampoon 1948 Hate Parade

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Actress Shirley Temple topped the hate parade of the Harvard Lampoon today as the undergraduate humor magazine disclosed its annual list of Hollywood "worst" awards.

Miss Temple had to share with Lana Turner the Lampoon's ranking of the actress who gave the "worst performance" of the year.

The Lampoon gave its "worst performance" by a male actor to Burt Lancaster for "I Walk Alone."

The magazine blamed Paramount for three of the year's 10 "worst" movies—"The Emperor Waltz," "Beyond Glory" and "Sorry, Wrong Number."

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Why Wooden This Be a Good Idea?

There's a brisk demand for the lumber which is being removed from the White House during current repairs, because everybody wants "a souvenir piece of the White House."

David Zwibel of 1331 F st. nw. suggests an excellent method of distributing these souvenirs, and at the same time helping a worthy cause. He says:

"Why not reserve these historic pieces of wood for those who send in special donations to the March of Dimes?"

PIED TYPE DEPT.

John W. Towry of 6149 N. 12th st., Arlington, Va., likes the expressive language used by a Tahlequah (Okla.) paper in covering the inaugural festivities. It said:

"The stars of the big show—the Trumans and Barkleys—were caught up in a round of activities that left little time for sleep. At 5 p. m., awkpfzzzbrxxxx."

VAGRANT THOUGHT

Remember those terrible days of last summer, when there wasn't a cool breeze to be found anyplace?

MISCELLANY

Most of Dean Acheson's photographs make the new Secretary of State look like a little boy who has just lifted the lid of a cookie jar and been startled by a jack-in-the-box . . . Stanley Goodman of No. 3 Wayne st., Troy, N. Y. (he's a Rensselaer Polytech man) sends me an item from a Troy newspaper. It quotes a typographical error submitted to this column, and enjoys a good laugh at another paper's error—but unfortunately makes a silly typo of its own, in the process . . . Minnie Money, crack FWA secretary, is developing a reputation for finding rides for people headed for out-of-town points. Thomas J. Murray of the general counsel's office there, tried train, plane and bus schedules in an effort to plan a trip to an isolated spot in Pennsylvania, but nothing worked out right. But he no sooner told Minnie Money his troubles than she found a couple of other travelers, headed right that way, and with room to spare . . . Money certainly does come in handy, eh? . . . Theodore Bullockus of 6323 Luzon ave. nw., nominates as the most non-committal headline of the month: "Sex Education Level in U. S. Either Very High or Very Low" . . . Mrs. F. I. Winant of 415 N. Norwood st., Arlington, Va., suggests that I tell Lieutenant Davidson that the Winants shipped a pup and a kitten from California to Washington by air freight in February of last year, and "neither complained of the cold; both came through in the best of health" . . . 13-year-old Eleanor Dorn of 15 Burning Tree ct., Bethesda, Md., tells me that she certainly was surprised to see on the Bethesda Theater marquee recently: "Fuller Bus Man—00." But in a few more minutes the other letters were added, to make it a prosaic "Fuller Brush Man—Cartoon" . . . Compared to Axis Sally, heroines of radio soap operas are rank amateurs in the art of getting into trouble.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Beautiful, half-grown, jet-black male cat; wonderful pet." (North 7210).

"Two-month-old female puppy; alert and affectionate." (Chestnut 9726).

SO SOON?

Here's our annual "first robin" item.

Ed Campion of 2502 N. 5th st., Arlington, Va., sighted our feathered friend in his back yard over the weekend.

WHO'S EXCITED, GENERAL?

Georgetown firefighters may recall that some time ago they put out a fire in the home of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Federal Works Administrator.

If the smoke-eaters think real hard, they'll probably recall, too, that as they left the general took a cigar box from his cabinet, wrapped it, and handed it to the lieutenant, with his thanks.

And if they've thought back that far, they shouldn't have any trouble completing the recollection—with General Fleming dashing into the fire station with another cigar box just as the boys were getting ready to open the first one.

The explanation for this strange behavior is now at hand. It seems that, before the fire, the general had in his cigar cabinet a full box of his favorite brand and an empty box.

After handing his "present" to the lieutenant, he had discovered to his horror that the full box was still there.

So, until the mistake was rectified, the original gift came mighty close to being an empty gesture.

Listen to Bill Gold's "This Is Washington," the District Line on the Air, Monday through Friday, over WTOP, from 10 a. m. to Arthur Godfrey time at 10:30.

Leonard Lyons . . .

NEW YORK. — Randolph Churchill accompanied his father to a showing of the Charles Boyer-Greta Garbo movie, "Conquest," in which Boyer played the role of Napoleon. The former Prime Minister, who knows and has made European history, watched Boyer portraying the leader of a people . . . After the first 15 minutes of the movie, Randolph whispered to his father, "What do you think of it?" . . . Winston Churchill replied, "We must lend ourselves to the illusion."

Joe DiMaggio has been appearing on so many broadcasts, television shows and sports dinners, without a fee, that he says he's going to Mexico to be able to say "No" to somebody. "In another country it won't matter," said DiMaggio . . . In preparation for "Das Marienleben" at Town Hall, Jennie Tourie practiced the 15 songs for six months, during all her free hours on, off and between her tour. The three pianists with whom she practiced got more than Miss Tourel's fee for her performance . . . When Toots Shor expressed surprise to Robert E. Sherwood that his Roosevelt-Hopkins book has sold only 100,000 copies to date, Sherwood said, "That's a lot. You should see how the others really sell. I've found out that they lie in the book business, just like in the theater."

The U. N. reporters who covered the General Assembly in Paris found that the toughest one to get for an interview was the Argentine's Juan Bramuglia, President of the Assembly. They never could get him to make a statement. Finally came word that he would see them in his hotel suite. They came, waited two hours and finally heard his statement: "I'm leaving and want to say goodby."

Anatol Litvak, who will be nominated for the Academy Award for "Snake Pit," has flown to Europe this week to arrange for the film showings there.

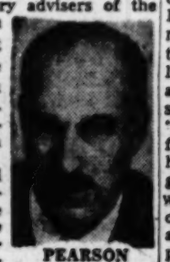
U. S. Seeks Soviet Trade Pact

By Drew Pearson

A highly important off-the-record conference between the House Armed Services Committee and the top military advisers of the Pentagon building last week may have set the pattern for a new policy of attempted cooperation with Russia.



PEARSON

The United States, the Congressmen were told, hopes to work out a temporary "economic agreement" with Russia.

Furthermore, the State Department sees no immediate prospect of war with Russia. The Congressmen were even told that the Russians do not appear to be preparing for war.

These statements are in amazing contrast to the type of information handed out by Secretary of Defense Forrestal's office just about a year ago. At that time newsmen and Congressmen alike were told in hushed voices about the imminence of war, given details about sensational Russian airplane manufacture.

At the recent closed-door conference between Congressmen and the brass hats, however, the ground was laid for cutting the Air Force down from 70 air groups to 48 groups.

Forrestal Calls Meeting

The meeting was called at the instance of Secretary Forrestal. He had the session well organized. Doing little talking himself, he called on various experts, the most important being George Kennan, the State Department's chief Russian expert. Kennan is the famous Mr. X who devised the State Department policy of surrounding Russia with a ring of anti-Communist nations.

This time, however, Kennan talked about an "economic agreement" with Russia to promote world peace through better trade relations.

Kennan didn't specify the form of the agreement, except to say that Russia greatly needed American goods, because of production deficiencies behind the Iron Curtain, and probably would be willing to do business. Nor would the State Department official guarantee success of the agreement on a long-time scale.

A permanent agreement with Russia outside the framework of the United Nations, for trade or other purposes, would have little chances of success. But when Russia needs something, her leaders are practical enough to forget their animosities until the need is fulfilled. On our part, he added, a trade agreement with Russia, even of temporary character, would be a step in the direction of continuing world peace.

Russia Unprepared for War

The State Department still is convinced that Russia is not preparing for an armed war against the United States. She is not ready now and will not be ready in the foreseeable future to cope with our vast military production in event of war, Kennan told the Congressmen.

Best intelligence we have is that Russia won't have any appreciable production of atomic bombs until 1951, Kennan reported, and by that time we will make Russia's production of the bomb seem infinitesimal.

However, he stressed that war could break out in Europe, even though Russia is not planning on one.

For this reason, Kennan said, it was highly urgent that we expedite action on the proposed Atlantic pact, both to implement the Marshall Plan and to give West European nations further assurances of protection against Russia.

The Atlantic pact would be a strong "morale builder" for these nations, he emphasized. The Marshall aid program has been as "successful as anyone could hope," he said, but countries that have aroused Russian ire as a result of our help are clamoring for definite evidence of armed assistance.

Armed Services committeemen also got a fill-in on our sensational new B-36 bomber from Air Secretary Stuart Symington, who reported that late tests proved the plane capable of a phenomenal flying range.

Truman and Polio Fund

Here is a cross-section of the mail from a great many people regarding the idea that President Truman help the Infantile Paralysis Fund and the memory of Franklin Roosevelt by making recordings of his favorite piano pieces—"Missouri Waltz" and "Anchors Aweigh":

Edward Neilsen, Cozad, Nebr.—"A great tribute to a departed friend. It would lend prestige to a high office, bring in a lot of revenue to fight a dread disease and put something on record that will increase in value as time goes on." . . . Mrs. Edna Hargrove, St. Louis, Mo.—"I'm sure if Mr. Truman were given the right approach that he'd be glad to help. I believe he is the right man to help a good cause." . . . Lily Mae Clawson, Spastics of America, Wichita—"How could anyone have felt sorry for Mr. Roosevelt merely because he was unable to walk! What a great inspiration he was to others who cannot walk. He taught everyone, the able-bodied and disabled alike, that a handicap need not prevent success." . . . Mrs. Lydia Coyle, Arenzville, Ill.—"Your idea about President Truman making a record for the Infantile Paralysis Fund is so wonderful." . . . Bowling Alley Proprietors Association of Greater Chicago—"Our organizations are composed of at least 150,000 people here in Chicago. Thousands of dollars have been raised here for the various benefits. We offer full support and hearty indorsement to your idea and believe it would sweep the country." . . . The Music Shop, Alhambra, Calif.—"We'll do all we can to support the idea." . . . Lancaster County (Pa.) Home for Crippled Children—"You father another fine idea. Unfortunately, O'Connor (head of the Warm Springs Foundation) and the other top brass seem mostly interested in perpetuating the name National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis; so much so that Sister Kenny, who undoubtedly has contributed much, has publicly blasted their methods."

★ ★ ★ NUMBER 1 IN A SERIES OF PERSONALITIES IN THE NEWS . . . AT THE HECHT CO. ★ ★ ★

HAZEL V. HAWSE, R.N., was born in Dayton, Virginia. She spent two years taking her pre-nursing training at Madison College and completed her training at Rockingham Memorial Hospital in Harrisonburg, Va. Hazel came to The Hecht Co. eight years ago and is now Chief Nurse in charge of The Hecht Co. Medical Department. Hazel is assisted by a staff of four Registered Nurses and two attendants.

One every 2 minutes . . .

SAYS HAZEL HAWSE, R.N., CHIEF NURSE OF THE HECHT CO. PRIVATE CLINIC

"Not pills . . . but patients . . . one every 2 minutes . . . knocking on my door . . . that's the average day's record," says Miss Hawse, director of The Hecht Co.'s Private Clinic for our Associates. Sounds like a lot of headaches for one store but The Hecht Co. is a big institution with a staff equal to the population of many a town! However, our Florence Nightingale takes this in her white-shoed stride! As Chief Nurse of The Hecht Co.'s Private Clinic . . . under the supervision of a doctor . . . Hazel and her staff of nurses treat the aches and pains of thousands of patients each year . . . without charge or obligation. When Margy has a headache, she makes a bee-line to Miss Hawse's restful and friendly headquarters, where an aspirin in a quiet room helps soothe her pain away. If Joe has a twinge in his shoulder, he finds diathermy treatments available here, too. If Mary needs a bit of old-fashioned "cheer" she'll find a few minutes relaxation in our private clinic. In the interests of our Associates' health, Hazel's Clinic program extends further. Every Fall she supervises the injection of thousands of "anti-flu" shots, as a preventive measure to keep our people hale and hearty. When smallpox broke out in New York City last year, most of our buyers and hundreds of others whose business took them to New York, received vaccinations in our Private Clinic. If a customer feels faint or a child has a crying spell, it's comforting to know that Hazel and her crew are Johnny-on-the-spot. Whether it's fever or fatigue, headaches or heartaches, our Associates look for quick relief in our modern Hospital Clinic. And with the cheerful, willing Hazel at the helm, it's almost a pleasure swallowing those pesky pills. So say her 3,500 patients, one every 2 minutes.
